Europe Sure America Will Call World Trade Parley

Believes Roosevelt Will Act After Van Zeeland Visit in June.

Groundwork Laid In Private Talks

Hitler Is Willing to Take Part, Authorities Are Agreed.

By the Associated Press.

London, April 25.—European economic authorities today were confidentially predicting a new and this time successful economic conference, and most of them were looking to President Roosevelt for the call to such a conclave.

They believed that when Premier Paul Van Zeeland of Belgium visits Washington in June he will ask the President to take the initiative in summoning the nations to a new discussion of world economic ills.

But informed European leaders, some of whom are taking part in groundwork for such an undertaking, stated flatly the conference never will be called unless its success has first been assured by adequate preparation.

Approach to the problem is being made in private discussions between individual statesmen, as opposed to the method that failed in the 1933 world economic conference, with delegations meeting in open sessions.

Authorities who follow world trends agreed that recent statements by President Roosevelt, Premier Stanley Baldwin, Adolf Hitler, Van Zeeland and other leaders have shown a widespread willingness to participate in a new economic gathering.

Will Look for Leader.

The recent series of informal discussions in European capitals has dealt largely with the extent of the world's economic problems and best methods of solving them.

Only when this exploratory stage is completed will the statesmen seek a leader to call the conference, which will have little more to do than rubber stamp tentative agreements which already will have been decided.

Here is a picture from authoritative sources of the parleys which many believe to be leading up to a conference.

Today Britain's Foreign Secretary Eden flew to Brussels to talk with Premier Van Zeeland, who already occupies a place well in the foreground of the world economic panorama because of his acceptance of the British and French request that he make a preliminary survey of economic barriers.

Eden undoubtedly will tell Van Zeeland what French Minister of Defense Daladier said during his recent visit to London, where he saw most of the British cabinet and discussed rearmament, trade and the falling franc. Eden and Van Zeeland also are expected to compare notes on what Reichsfuehrer Hitler said to George Lansbury, Britain's labor leader, in Berlin last week, and what Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, German economics minister, said to Van Zeeland in Brussels about the same time.

All this is expected to arm Van Zeeland for his visit to Roosevelt.

The present under-cover dickering, informed sources said, is based in hard realities. To back up that contention they cited the letter Lansbury wrote yesterday to a Pacific conference at Manchester concerning his recent meeting with Hitler.

"Not Deluded by Words."

"I am not deluded by words; neither is he," wrote the labor leader.

No European statesman wants a conference he calls to be branded a failure, but they all are willing to let President Roosevelt take a chance. However, informed persons say the call for a conference may not come for a long time although they are confident it will come before President Roosevelt leaves office in 1941.

By that time the Spanish war and its immediate aftermath should be out of the way, thereby removing Europe's greatest obstacle to agreement.

European statesmanship meanwhile is awaiting the answers to immediate questions.

Britain must survey her own imperial problems in the empire conference beginning May 14, just after the coronation, before taking up with the United States such issues as the film quotas muddle; iron ore

Mountaineer Near Death on 47th Day Of Religious Fast

Stooping Oak, Tenn., April 25 (AP). Weak and fainting, Jackson Whitlow persisted today in a religious fast which mountain neighbors feared could end only in death unless he soon received "a call from the Lord to begin eating again."

The residents of this Cumberland hamlet prayed for his recovery, as Whitlow, 45, was bedfast.

It was 47 days ago that he announced he had received a spiritual summons to refrain from food as purification for an unexplained mission.

"If I die," said the gaunt trapper, now a victim of intestinal hemorrhages, "it will be the Lord's will."

Vivid Contrasts Shown at Slum Clearance Exhibit Review

Today at the parish hall of St. John's Episcopal Church, an exhibition of slum-clearance work will open. Top, Mrs. Florence Stewart inspects a diorama depicting a slum section. Lower, Eames MacVeagh examines a model housing community.

Church Exhibit Against Slums To Open Today

St. John's Display to Show Work for Housing.

Washington's churches are opening an exhibit in St. John's Episcopal Church parish hall today of the work public and private agencies are doing to clear the Capital of slums.

Dioramas and models, charts and maps of several projects, including Langston Terrace in Northeast Washington and Greenbelt, Md., were being moved into the exhibit place at 819 Sixteenth street northwest yesterday afternoon.

And tonight several of the Capital's civic and religious leaders will take part in a ceremony formally opening the display. Bishop James E. Freeman, of Washington Cathedral, and Clarence Phelps Dodge, president of the Washington Community Chest, will be present, as will be representatives of several governmental units active in slum clearance.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, president of the Washington Board of Commissioners and chairman of the Alley Dwelling Authority, will make a short address, and Canon Anson Phelps Stokes will speak as president of the Washington Housing Association.

Churches Are Active.

The churches are taking interest in better housing because they recognize the definite relation between housing and religion, Mrs. Florence Stewart, executive secretary of the Washington Housing Association, said yesterday, explaining the exhibit of her organization.

She pointed out that her association was particularly interested in the clearing out of old abandoned dwellings.

"There is no question of the advisability of getting rid of places like this," she said, indicating a picture of a deserted building.

"Such houses are hazardous because children play in them—and almost anything can happen."

Through this week's exhibit the Washington Housing Association wants to tell the public about its work in calling the attention of officials to violations of the District's housing regulations.

Changes Are Pictured.

The Alley Dwelling Authority, the Public Works Administration and the Resettlement Administration are entering their graphic models of slum clearance and housing projects. Scenic and lighting effects will help the visitor visualize what Langston Terrace and Greenbelt will look like when finished. One large diorama shows the entire transition of a slum area to a neighborhood of tidy homes with all modern conveniences. The Alley Dwelling Authority will show pictures of slum conditions that existed in Washington before new homes replaced them.

The Rev. James F. Madison, assistant rector at St. John's, is chairman of the committee on church participation for the exhibit. Other members are Dr. Oliver J. Hart, rector at St. John's; the Rev. J. Hillman Hollister, D. D., pastor of Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church; the Rev. Norman Gerstenfeld, of Eighth Street Temple; the Rev. R. W. Brooks, of Lincoln Congregational Temple, and H. C. Barden and Canon Stokes.

Bilbao Facing Mass Attack; Rebels to Protest British Aid

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, France, April 25.—Gen. Francisco Franco today massed his northern armies, claiming victory over a wide front yesterday, for a fresh thrust he hoped would carry his banners into Bilbao, beleaguered Basque capital.

The confident insurgent leader turned to shake a figurative fist at Great Britain.

His Salamanca government announced it would protest to London against the part British warships have played while British merchantmen have run the blockade of near-starving Bilbao.

(Two more British freighters reached Bilbao early today, said dispatches from that port. Three ran the blockade Friday while the huge battle cruiser Hood and other British naval vessels stood by.)

Claiming a major victory in yesterday's advances, the insurgent forces massed around Durango, key point in the defenses of Bilbao, just 16 miles away by a downhill road.

Others Concentrate.

Other nationalist forces were concentrating in the region of Oviedo, held by a long-besieged insurgent garrison. There the insurgent command was reported preparing an offensive to free Oviedo, chief city of Asturias in the northwest, from its siege and to hasten a clean-up of the entire coast.

The importance of the forthcoming operations in the north was stressed today in both insurgent and government camps.

Both admitted the fall of Bilbao would probably have a decisive effect on the tide of war. Gen. Franco then would be able to transfer tens of thousands of troops to the Madrid front, and the insurgent navy would be released from its attempts to blockade Bilbao for action against

Bloom May Get Foreign Affairs Helm in House

By Edward T. Folliard.

The long-standing ambition of Representative Sol Bloom (Democrat), of New York, to be chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs may soon be realized.

Bloom, who entertains on a large scale for foreign diplomats here, is the ranking Democrat on the Foreign Affairs Committee. The present chairman is Representative Sam D. McReynolds, of Tennessee.

McReynolds, well-posted Tennesseans said last night, is likely to be appointed by Gov. Gordon Browning to the seat made vacant Friday by the death of Senator Nathan L. Bachman. Bloom then would be in line for McReynolds' committee post.

The names of three other men are being mentioned in connection with the late Senator Bachman's seat—George L. Berry, chairman of the Nonpartisan League; Representative J. Ridley Mitchell, of Cookeville, and Mitchell Long, Democratic State chairman of Tennessee.

Those familiar with Tennessee politics say that Gov. Browning will, in all likelihood, appoint a man who (1) is in favor of President Roosevelt's plan to enlarge the Supreme Court, and (2) a man not too friendly with Senator Kenneth McKellar, of Tennessee.

Gov. Browning is regarded as a

Stepin Fetchit Hurt As Auto Crashes

New York, April 24 (AP).—Stepin Fetchit, the droll colored comic, was in Harlem Hospital today, his dancing feet stilled by an automobile accident in which he suffered a possible skull fracture. Doctors said his condition was fair.

Stepin Fetchit, in private life Lincoln Perry, lost control of his automobile when a tire blew out. It crashed into an elevated railway pillar on Eighth avenue in Harlem. He was alone.

U. S. Chamber Studies Plans For Federal Rapprochement

Gathering for the annual meeting, starting today, which will celebrate the United States Chamber of Commerce's twenty-fifth anniversary, many of the Nation's leading businessmen and industrialists last night were discussing again the possibility of a rapprochement of Government and business.

Re-election of President Roosevelt and approval by the Supreme Court of the Wagner act, these leaders said, indicates that much of the program for which Mr. Roosevelt stands is permanent. They feel that the chamber should accept this view and, basing its policy on such an assumption, offer co-operation to the Administration.

These suggestions, however, it was recalled last night, have been advanced in the past, notably with the advent of Harper Sibley, Rochester, N. Y., banker, to the presidency from which he will retire this week. They have never borne more than transient fruit under the New Deal, and the chamber and the Administration appear farther apart than ever.

The week's program beginning today is marked by the absence, for the first time, of any prominent member of the Administration, although Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace will attend a dinner tonight of the American section of the international chamber. Wallace is not on the program for a speech, however.

Although the agenda for the meeting which begins today called for discussions ranging from employer-worker relationships to world

2 Va. Towns Isolated as Rivers Rise

Charlottesville, Culpeper Cut Off; Many Motorists Stranded.

Trains on 2 Lines Halted; James Expected to Reach 28 Feet.

Rising rivers and streams in several sections of Virginia blocked highways and delayed rail traffic after a week-end of sustained rainfall.

Between Orange and Charlottesville trains were halted by high water on the main lines of both the Chesapeake and Ohio and the Southern railways.

Bridges were out and highways inundated so that both Charlottesville and Culpeper were isolated.

Giant trucks and pleasure cars were stalled in trying to get through water-covered roads in many sections.

At both Culpeper and Charlottesville, several hundred motorists were stranded, many of them Washingtonians, and unable to get to their homes last night, either by road or rail.

Near Washington the Mount Vernon Highway was blocked at Hunting Creek because of high water.

Brooks Became Torrents.

Two normally small mountain brooks reached river proportions and cut off highway traffic leading to and from Culpeper.

Mountain Run, swollen by torrential rains, was no longer a tiny stream 10 ft. wide and 2 ft. deep but a raging river in some places two miles wide and swelling up over bridges and highway. Similarly, Gaines Run, usually about 5 ft. wide, was as much as three quarters of a mile wide.

A 27-hour rainfall in the Charlottesville area left a precipitation of more than five and one half inches. The Rivanna River was up between four and five ft. and still rising. Water entered woolen mill basements, necessitating removal of supplies.

F. N. Hibbard, in charge of the U. S. Weather Bureau at Richmond, said the James River probably could be expected to reach from 26 to 28 ft. at Columbia, which he said would send the stage at Richmond to 16.5 or 17.5 early tomorrow, the Associated Press reported.

Hibbard said he hoped 28 ft. would be the crest at Columbia and predicted fair weather for today, but admitted if it rains today as it yid yesterday, "It may be just too bad. It looks like we'll have a moderate flood down here."

Highway 250 Blocked

The State Highway Department engineering division reported route 250 blocked by water between Zion's Crossroads and Shadwell in Albermarle County.

Water from the Appottomax River, driven by southeast winds above 20 miles per hour, covered the approach to the bridge between Hopewell and Richmond but the road was still passage early last night.

Route 15 between Boswell's Tavern and Gordonsville was blocked, as was the same highway between Culpeper and Warrenton. Impassable also were Route 3 between Culpeper and Sperryville, and Route 29 between Madison and Ruckersville. Route 239 between Charlottesville and Monticello was closed to traffic by high water.

The engineering division said all these blockades probably would be cleared within six hours after cessation of rainfall. The forecast for Virginia was "generally fair today and tomorrow, not much change in temperature."

Rivers Rise at Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh, April 25 (AP).—Hours of almost incessant rain sent the Alleghany and Monongahela rivers soaring toward flood stages tonight.

At midnight the Ohio gauged 17 feet at the juncture of the streams, just 8 feet below the flood stage. It was rising two-tenths of a foot an hour.

Weather Observer W. S. Brotzman predicted a 20-foot stage by 8 a. m. He said the rains were unusually heavy throughout the tri-State area.

The prediction was for occasional rains tomorrow in the upper Ohio watershed.

Quintuplets Born; Village Will Help Destitute Parents

Peiping, April 25 (AP).—Chinese newspapers here reported today that a peasant woman at Luanhsien has given birth to quintuplets, all normal boys and all living.

Because the parents are extremely poor the village elder has promised to help bring the babies up.

Medical records show that quintuplets are born once in 41,600,000 times; quadruplets once in 747,000 instances, triplets once in 7,103 instances, and twins once in every 87 cases.

The last previous authenticated birth of living quintuplets was that of the famous Dionne babies in Canada. There are records of 30 other quintuple births in medical history.

Ancient medical records, which tended to exaggeration, contain many instances of wholesale births, topped by the report of Martin Cromerus, Polish historian, that the Countess Margaret, wife of Count Virboslaus, brought forth at one birth in 1296 a total of 36 living children.

30,000 See U. S 'Bird Man' Die In France as Parachutes Fail

famed American "bat man," who plunged to his death in France yesterday when his parachute failed to open.

Clem Sohn, 'Batwing' Flier, Hurtles to Death at Air Show at Vincennes After Spectators Cheer Leap From Plane.

By the Associated Press.

Vincennes, France, April 25.—Clem Sohn, famous in the United States as the "bat-wing" flier, plunged 6,000 feet to his death before 30,000 spectators today when his parachute failed to open in the featured event of an air show here.

The death leap of the 26-year-old Michigan "bird man" came as a tragic climax to performances by some of France's best-known fliers.

The spectators, who had cheered as Sohn, plunging from an airplane high over the Vincennes airport, completed a series of evolutions in the sky with the aid of bat-like wings strapped to his arms, became aware of impending disaster when they saw the youth pull the ripcord of his parachute and saw it fail to open.

The crowd sat breathless as they watched Sohn, plummeting dizzily through space, struggle to break his plunge by means of a second, emergency, parachute attached to his waist. It, too, failed to open, and the falling airman plowed into the earth.

Widely known in United States air circles, Sohn had been a feature attraction at numerous air carnivals in Europe since arriving from America about a year ago.

The bat-wing device which he perfected permitted him to simulate flight after jumping from an air-

First Test Vote On Court Plan Due This Week

Van Nuys Will Try to Cut Tribunal Revision From Measure.

Friends and foes of the President's court plans will grapple this week in the first test vote, it became apparent last night when Senator Frederick Van Nuys (Democrat), Indiana, said he will press for an early Judiciary Committee vote on his motion to split off Supreme Court revision sections of the Administration bill.

While Van Nuys said he will not insist on a vote tomorrow on his motion, when the committee meets for the first time in executive session to begin drafting the bill, he said that in "two or three days" a vote will be taken and that his motion must be disposed of before anything else is considered.

His statement conincided with conflicting claims as to ultimate fate of the Supreme Court proposals, topped by the declaration of Senator Henry F. Ashurst (Democrat), Arizona, chairman of the committee, that he is confident the plan will be appoved in substantially the form requested by the President.

"We might find it necessary to change some phrase from the subjunctive mood to the imperative, but it will carry authority for six justices," he said.

Definite Alignment Expected.

Van Nuys predicted that "an overwhelming majority" of the committee will join him in the scheme to leave the Supreme Court provisions of the bill to stand or fall on their merits, apart from other judiciary recommendations of the President.

"If the committee wants to talk over generalities for a day or two," he went on, "I shall have no objections. My motion, however, is the pending question and must be

Roosevelt's Aid Held Sole Hope To Avert Strike

Railway and Ship Officials Hint Appeal Under Federal Law.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 25.—Presidential intervention was held by the employer group tonight to be the only way of averting a threatened strike of 25,000 railroad and shipping workers in the metropolitan area.

Negotiations between railroad officials and representatives of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers and Station Employes collapsed on the eve of the expiration of a 48-hour postponement.

Union officials predicted the walkout would tie up passenger, as well as freight, traffic.

"We recognize the situation as being hopeless," said Vice President John Walber, of the New York Central, spokesman for eight major roads.

President Must Act.

"We expect that President Roosevelt will have to step in under section 10 of the railway act and name an emergency board to conduct hearings and render a decision in 30 days."

The walkout, first scheduled for Saturday noon, was postponed by a truce until Monday noon.

After a futile conference between union and railroad officials which lasted until late last night, Otto S. Beyer, Federal labor mediator, who had been standing by, stepped into the dispute this morning, to no avail.

He talked first with union officials and then with the railroad men, and then said a conference of the two parties expected this afternoon would not be held.

The brotherhood demanded an

Farmer Plans Own Funeral; Will Conduct Services in May

By the Associated Press.

Danville, Ind., April 25.—Wade Millman, grizzled 88-year-old farmer, who says his fun in life has been "making money," announced today he would conduct his funeral services Sunday afternoon, May 16, at the Canaan rural church near here.

"I'll preach the sermon myself," he said, "but it won't be a sermon, and I won't preach. I'm just going to talk, and I will have things to say that may teach you something."

Millman's casket, built from an oak tree on his farm is ready. Charles Bennett, woodworker at Coatesville, put the finishing touches to it last week. The boards are 1¾ inches in thickness.

"I don't want any preacher or singing at my funeral," the old farmer explained, "so I decided I would take care of the thing myself and get it over with.

"I have selected six pallbearers and paid each one of them $5. I want them to put me in this coffin, and I don't want an undertaker. Then I want them to place me in a farm wagon and haul me down there where I have a stone erected at my grave.

Just before he posed for a picture at his tombstone he lent a neighbor $1,600 on a mortgage.

Mrs. Millman, who is 78, has refused to let her husband keep the casket in their farm home. So it's being stored in Monnett's shop. The couple was married 11 years ago.

"I couldn't cook, and I couldn't make beds," was the way Millman, up to that time a bachelor, explained it. "Mrs. Ida Leathers owed me $800 and everyone said she was a fine woman and a good cook. I talked it over with her and we were married.

"I thought that was the easiest way to settle the debt," added Mrs. Millman. "It's worked out all right—except for him wanting to keep that casket in the house."

Senate Move Is Planned to Merge FHA And HOLC

Senator Byrd Will Offer Consolidation Bill This Week.

Saving Estimate Put at $24,500,000

Cut in Administrative Expenses Declared Imperative.

By Russell Smith.

Asserting "administrative cost reductions are imperatively necessary" in the light of President Roosevelt's budget message, Senator Harry F. Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, announced last night he will introduce this week a bill consolidating the Home Owners Loan Corporation and the Federal Housing Administration.

Such a merger, Byrd said, would save $24,500,000 annually.

Gathering leaders of the United States Chamber of Commerce during the day said informally, however, that tax collections from corporations may increase materially during the year, in which event the President's estimate of a $418,000,000 deficit may prove overpessimistic.

They based this view on what they termed a wide shift of corporate accounting from the calendar year to the fiscal year basis. This change in income tax periods, they believe, had the effect of lowering revenue during March and its distribution over other periods of the year.

Pay Rolls Lead Employment.

Federal Reserve Board figures, of special interest as bearing both on prospective tax collections and on business reaction to the budget deficit, issued yesterday showed pay rolls moving ahead of employment in recovery gains and business generally continuing its upward curve.

Factory pay rolls rolled up a 5.4 per cent advance to 101.2 per cent of the 1923-25 average between mid-February and mid-March, the board said, while factory employment rose 2 per cent to 101. Prices rose rapidly in March, but declined in early April.

"The return of the discussion of economy in government in Washington recently has been encouraging," Byrd said in a mimeographed statement.

"But, we must bear in mind that we cannot economize and continue to write unnecessary checks—checks for overlapping agencies, duplicated functions and unnecessary personnel and administrative overhead.

"On the basis of the first set of recommendations made to the original Senate Reorganization Committee I propose this week to introduce legislation consolidating the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, now in the process of long-time liquidation, and the Federal Housing Administration. Working separately these two agencies last year employed approximately 20,000 persons and their operating expenses were nearly $47,000,000. Their functions are similar now and the similarity is growing with the age of the FHA.

Calls Merger Practical.

"Experts advise me they could be consolidated, without impairing the functions of either, at an annual saving of approximately $24,500,000. There is no reason why taxpayers should not be given the benefit of this saving and the increased efficiency that would result.

"There are 20 or more other agencies, which, established and publicly justified as emergency establishments, can be consolidated, merged, or liquidated, just as profitably.

"If the appropriate committee will allow this bill to come to the floor for full and open discussion by Senators, other bills of this nature providing for substantial savings are sure to follow.

"Real savings are certain to be found in constructive reorganization of executive functions for economy and efficiency through elimination of overlapping activity, unnecessary personnel and administrative costs. A mere juggling of agencies from one department to another will amount to nothing except to freeze into permanency the personnel and administrative costs of temporary agency structures. There is ample reason to believe that a careful survey of unnecessary personnel in the Federal Government will reveal the civil executive pay roll is a fertile field for immediate constructive economy.

"An analysis of the revised estimates of Federal receipts and expenditures attached to the President's budget and economy message of last week indicates immediate and additional administrative cost reductions are imperatively necessary.

"Of the 13 divisions of the budget listed in the breakdown of those estimates, an actual increase

First Test Vote On Court Plan Due This Week

"If there is congestion in the lower courts, and additional judges there are necessary, we certainly should supply them. But that's entirely different from packing the Supreme Court."

The test vote on this motion is expected to align definitely the four uncommitted Senators who hold the Judiciary Committee balance of power, for friends of the President's plans will vote against Van Nuys' measure. Its fate may provide a clue to ultimate fate of the legislation.

Both within the committee and the Senate itself the division is so narrow at present that a shift of two or three votes may decide the issue. Hence, the death of Senator Nathan Bachman (Democrat), of Tennessee, may be of importance to the disposition of the bill.

Browning May Hold Key.

Bachman was uncommitted. Gov. Gordon Browning of Tennessee, former Representative and a member of the Judiciary Committee, will have the naming of Bachman's successor. The only possible key to Browning's attitude is his tart retort of several weeks ago, when President Roosevelt urged ratification of the child labor amendment, that he did not propose to have Washington telling his State how to vote on the matter.

When Ashburn last night forecast enactment of the bill, he was attempting to counteract the effect of a statement he made Saturday that an unfavorable report by the committee on the bill would not be necessarily "fatal." This declaration gave renewed encouragement to enemies of the legislation.

"I'm quite sure there will be ten votes for the bill as it is," he said last night. "I believe there will be seven or eight votes against it.

"One thing the hearings conclusively prove is that the bill does not take any judicial power from the Supreme Court. I asked that question of 40 or 50 witnesses: 'Does this bill take away the judicial power of the court?' and not one of them answered that it did.

"I was never more cheerful or encouraged than now."

Two More Proposals Pending.

In addition to the Van Nuys proposal, two other motions of great potential significance are to be made in the Judiciary Committee. One is that of Senator Patrick J. McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, to provide for a flat increase of two justices, taking no account of age of justices, and the other is that of Senator Carl A. Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, for a flexible court personnel instead of a permanent increase when a justice fails to retire at 70.

Added to the intrinsic importance of the motions is the fact that their authors are uncommitted on the President's bill if their own views are not adopted. How this attitude may be affected by rejection of their motions is problematical.

The New York lawyer and publicist, Amos R. E. Pinchot, last night made public an open letter addressed to President Roosevelt in opposition to the court plan. It covered 23 typewritten pages, exclusive of tables inclosed with the letter, and was dedicated to the proposition that regimentation of industry and agriculture will lead to dictatorship.

Pinchot Fears Dictatorship.

"And you, Mr. President," Pinchot said, "will either clothe yourself with a dictator's power, or you will abandon managed economy. No other courses are open to you."

Pinchot said the purpose of the Supreme Court revision is to revive the NRA, invalidation of which he called "the best break of luck the New Deal ever had." He concluded: "Mr. President, I do not doubt that your ultimate aims are of a nature that you can justify in your own heart. But I cannot believe that you realize, to the full, the significance of the means you are taking to reach them. No illusion has brought to credulous peoples so much disappointment, and suffering and sorrow, as the illusion that a man clothed with great power will or can use it for the common good. And nothing is revealed more clearly by history than the fact that, with all its faults, democracy is the one hopeful form of government that has been devised by men."

The National Lawyers Guild announced last night attorneys and judges "outstanding in professional and public life" are among the speakers who on April 30 will defend the court bill at simultaneous dinner meetings throughout the country. Gov. Philip La Follette of Wisconsin and Raymond B. Stevens, recently resigned tariff commissioner, also will talk.

The speeches will be broadcast over a national hook-up.

The Supreme Court meets today for another decision day, when there is some prospect its findings will be announced on constitutionality of the unemployment provisions of the social security act, and validity of an Alabama law enacted pursuant to the Federal statute.

The court may reveal, too, its decision as to whether it will pass on old-age pensions of the Federal law before taking its summer recess.

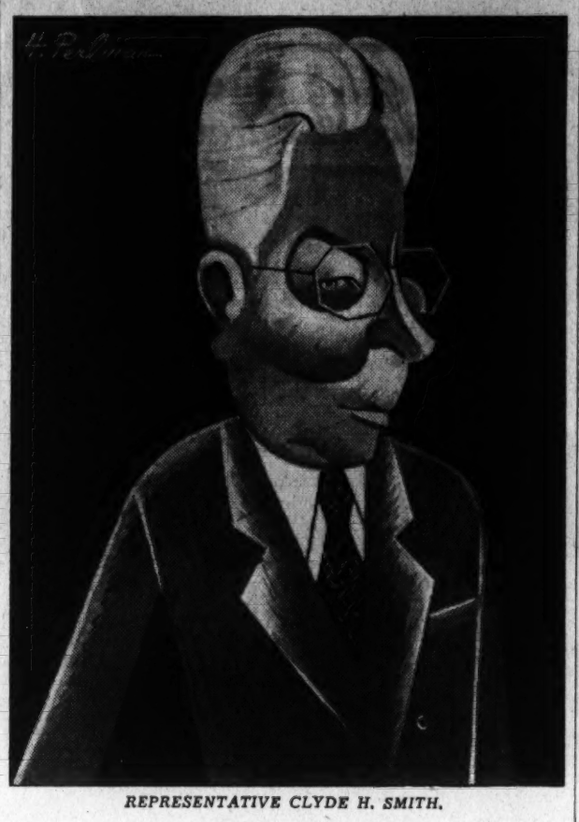
Rep. C. H. Smith Sought Office 48 Times and Never Lost a Race



REPRESENTATIVE CLYDE H. SMITH.

Launched Political Career Now in 40th Year by Winning Seat in Maine Legislature at 21; Is Social Security Pioneer.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

Running for office 48 times in the last 40 years, silver-haired Clyde H. Smith, Representative from Maine's Third District, never has lost a race.

A couple of generations ago—when he was barely old enough to vote—he decided to run for a seat in the State Legislature. His elders were surprised, but not so resentful as they might have been if the average lad, just turned 21, had sought such an office. When they thought it over, it seemed reasonable that young Smith might have the makings of a statesman. He was already an experienced business man with an up-and-coming clothing store; he was personable and ambitious; he could make a convincing speech. They decided to give him a chance.

So at 21, he came off winner in his first political race and went to the State Legislature as the youngest person in Maine ever to be voted into such an office.

Social Security Pioneer.

His record in politics since then seems to prove early faith in his ability was justified. He was a pioneer in helping to formulate social security measures. In 1922 he introduced a bill in the Maine Legislature to provide old-age pensions, the first to be offered in that State and among the earliest to receive legislative consideration anywhere.

The workmen's compensation act and passage of the "Smith bill," providing for the sale of water power, not locally utilized, beyond State lines passed both branches of the Maine Legislature largely as results of Smith's efforts while he was a member of the State Senate.

One of the Representative's chief interests at present is "iron-clad neutrality." Of the two outstanding neutrality measures pending in Congress, he prefers the Pittman bill to the McReynold's bill because the former provides for mandatory enforcement.

Opposes All Arms Sales.

"If we Americans are really sincere about wanting permanent peace, we should refuse to sell munitions to other nations at any time," he said. "This would be the most practical peace insurance we could possibly have."

Strong in the belief that governments "derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," Smith has been a stanch friend of the direct primary system, aiding in its defense each time threats of changes have been made.

in expenditures is shown in 10. The net result is the forecast that expenditures next year will be $102,000,000 greater than they are in the current year, exclusive of the bonus, and the prospective deficit will approach one-half billion dollars for the fiscal year beginning next July."

A study showed 1,114 corporations and other business establishments switched from a calendar to a fiscal year basis during the five months ended October, 1936, chamber officers said.

The heaviest conversion was in October, when 311 changed over, and officials said this number probably was topped in November and December.

Most of the businesses changing from calendar to fiscal years are attempting to bring accounting procedure more nearly in line with seasonal trade trends, it was reported.

Chamber officials said interest in setting up "normal business years" has been quickening of late. At present, the "natural business-year council" of New York is urging changes. It contends that "in the interest of economy and efficiency, the natural year of an enterprise should be adopted as its fiscal year."

Changes from calendar to fiscal years must be approved by the Internal Revenue Bureau, but officials said it does not object to any "reasonable" change.

The Treasury now is investigating causes for the drop of March revenues under estimates. Fiscal-year changes are being studied along with other factors, but officials said their effect has not yet been evaluated.

The optimism reflected in the Reserve Board's statement found further expression in a statement by the National Association of Manufacturers.

From New York, the Associated Press reported that the manufacturers had completed a survey which showed 11,000,000 persons on their pay rolls and employment at 1929 levels. The survey was as of April 1.

Since 1933, the association said, approximately 3,310,000 workers have gained jobs, of which about 2,190,000 were given employment in the durable goods industries alone.

"The manufacturing industries," the report added, "are swiftly re-employing the idle. With the strides that have been made and the indication for the future, if co-operation can be supplanted for industrial strife, it is only folly to speak of America with a permanent unemployment problem of huge dimensions."

trade, chamber officials said the organization's attitude toward the Administration policies probably would not be indicated until Thursday when it chooses a successor to President Harper Sibley. The resolutions committee also will report at that time.

The name of George Davis, a Kansas City director, was discussed among others as possible new Presidents. A test between the conservative and liberal factions in the chamber's membership appeared probable.

Although the organization has opposed President Roosevelt's policies on many occasions, Sibley has been viewed by some members as a moderate liberal.

National Council Meets.

The annual session, marking the chamber's twenty-fifth anniversary, will begin today with a meeting of the national council, composed of one representative from each of its 1,550 member chambers.

Group discussions begin tomorrow on a wide range of topics, including application of the Wagner act to transportation, sit-down strikes, the undistributed surplus profits tax, investment trends of life insurance companies, crop insurance and farm tenancy and possibilities of inflation.

Sir Edward Beatty, chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, will deliver the major address at the chamber's annual banquet Thursday night. Guests at that meeting will include Secretaries Hull, Morgenthau and Perkins, Chairman Marriner S. Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board, and Chairman Jesse H. Jones, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Taylor Drafted Pact in 1936 Magazine Says

'Fortune' Reports U. S. Steel Had Agreement Ready Months Ago.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 25.—The essential terms of the agreement between the United States Steel Corporation and the Committee for Industrial Organization were drafted by Myron C. Taylor, chairman of the U. S. Steel board, last summer while he was abroad, Fortune Magazine says in its May issue, out tomorrow.

In an article purporting to be the inside story of the events leading up to the agreement, the magazine prints what it calls Taylor's "labor formula" and tells of a series of "10 or 12" secret meetings at which Taylor and John L. Lewis, C. I. O. head, reached the settlement, which was made public early in March.

"The company recognizes the right of its employes to bargain collectively through representatives freely chosen by them without dictation, coercion or intimidation in any form or from any source. It will negotiate and contract with the representatives of any group of its employes so chosen and with any organization as the representative of its members, subject to the recognition of the principle that the right to work is not dependent on membership or non-membership in any organization and subject to the right of every employe freely to bargain in such manner and through such representatives, if any, as he chooses."

Other pre-agreement developments, according to the article, were:

1. That Taylor broke up a proposed united front of industries designed to smash the C. I. O. last fall.

2. That Taylor opposed the steel industry's antiunion manifesto last June, although it was signed by U. S. Steel.

3. That months before his first meeting with Lewis, Taylor discussed with business associates the advisability of starting negotiations with the C. I. O. without waiting for Lewis to make the first move.

4. That Taylor kept even the heads of his own biggest operating companies in the dark about his plans for recognizing the C. I. O.

5. That in February Taylor kept the independent steel companies from increasing wages in an attempt to head off the unionization drive.

New Orleans Set To Greet Roosevelt On Fishing Cruise

New Orleans, April 25 (U.P.).—Sportsmen eyed the "fishing flotilla" of President Roosevelt in the river here tonight and said he could have chosen no finer waters than the Gulf for his seagoing vacation beginning Thursday.

After a brief visit in New Orleans, Mr. Roosevelt is to be taken to sea aboard the new 1,850-ton destroyer, Moffett, it was learned. The Moffett and the smaller destroyer Decatur tied up at the Algiers naval station, across the river from the dsetroyer Schenck and the Presidential yacht Potomac, to which Mr. Roosevelt will transfer in the Gulf.

Tentative plans called for the President to witness the dedication of Roosevelt Mall, part of the huge city park WPA project, and perhaps to motor 22 miles upriver to inspect the $13,000,000 Bonnet Carre Spillway.

The Presidential train will arrive here at 12:30 p. m. Thursday, after Mr. Roosevelt and his party pause briefly on the Mississippi Gulf coast. Elliott Roosevelt and Gov. Richard Leche plan to meet the President at Gulfport, Miss.

friend of the President's court plan, and it is expected that he will appoint a man who feels as he does about it.

Gov. Browning is expected to try to wrest Senator McKellar's Senate seat away from him in 1940. McKellar forces opposed Browning in his race for Governor.

May Consult Hull.

It is considered likely that Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, may be consulted about a successor to Senator Bachman. The seat that Bachman held was vacated by Hull when President Roosevelt appointed him to head the State Department. Hull remains a power in Tennessee politics.

McReynolds, as chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, has been valuable to President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull, particularly in drafting neutrality legislation.

Representative Bloom, who stands in line for McReynolds' chairmanship if the latter goes over to the other end of the Capitol, has had a varied experience in his 67 years.

In his younger days he was a showman and a promoter at the Chicago Fair of 1893. He came to tthe House in 1923, but attracted little attention nationally until he became associated with the George Washington Bicentennial Celebration.

Then his powers as a showman were brought into play. He not only made America George Washington conscious, but Sol Bloom conscious.

Pay Rolls Step Ahead of Jobs In Trade Gain

Reserve Report Shows Industry Increased During Spring.

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday industry continued its upward pace during March, with pay rolls stepping ahead of employment in recovery gains.

Between mid-February and mid-March, the board said, factory pay rolls rolled up a 5.4 per cent advance to 101.2 per cent of the 1923-25 average. Factory employment climbed 2 per cent to 101.

The board made no reference to any possible influence the strike situation might have on the industrial statistics.

Prices moved swiftly higher in March, the report continued, but swung downward during the first half of this month.

An increase in industrial production last month pushed the 1923-25 index 2 per cent over February to 118, the board explaining:

"The rise reflected a sharp increase in output of minerals, chiefly coal, and an increase of somewhat more than seasonally in manufacturing.

"Activity at steel mills increased seasonally and in the first three weeks of April was over 90 per cent of capacity. In the automobile industry output showed about the usual seasonal increase in March and the first three weeks of April, considerable fluctuations during this period being largely in response to developments in the labor situation."

Expansion in lumber and nonferrous metals production and cotton consumption also were noted, with production at woolen mills and shoe factories continuing at previous high levels.

Discussing bank credit, the board said member bank excess reserves increased from $1,270,000,000 on March 24 to $1,590,000,000 on April 21, due chiefly to disbursements by the Treasury and purchases of Government obligations by the Federal Reserve System.

Jacoby, Bachner Win Bridge Championship

New York, April 25 (AP).—Oswald Jacoby, leader of the four aces, today became the first defending champion to repeat in the United States Bridge Association's National Championships. Playing with a new partner, Lester Bachner, of New York, Jacoby defeated 28 entrants in the open pair championship.

Their nearest rivals, the New York combination of M. D. Maier and Waldemar K. Von Zedtwitz, had a grand total of 426. Last year Jacoby won the pair championship with David Burnstine, a member of the four aces. Hillel R. King and Arthur I. Westrich, of Washington, D. C., finished sixteenth today.

Foreign Policy ReportUpholds Views of Stalin

Contrasts New Constitution Favorably With Nazi Restrictions.

Siding generally with Josef Stalin as against Leon Trotsky in its view of the new Soviet constitution, a Foreign Policy Association report made public last night stressed that document's guaranties of civil liberties and contrasted them favorably with "the racial restrictions imposed by the Nazi government of Germany."

At the same time, the report, written by Vera Micheles Dean, of the association's staff, said that the constitution "perpetuates the dictatorship of the proletariat" and raised the question whether it is to be viewed "merely as an important step in internal Soviet development" or "as a valuable weapon in the struggle with fascism."

Establishes Socialist Economy.

"The purpose of the new constitution is to translate into law the practical results achieved by the Soviet system during the past 12 years," the report said. "According to Stalin it registers the establishment of socialist economy, the elimination of class antagonisms, and the attainment of equality by all national groups composing the Soviet Union; and provides for untrammeled exercise of these rights.

"While for the peoples of the capitalist countries the constitution of the U. S. S. R. will have the significance of a program of action," said Stalin last November, 'for the peoples of the U. S. S. R. it has the significance of a summary of their struggles, a summary of their victories on the front of the emancipation of mankind.'"

Concerning civil liberties, the report said: "The new constitution assures all citizens equal rights irrespective of nationality or race, in all spheres of economic cultural, social and political life. Direct or indirect restriction of these rights or establishment of privileges for citizens on account of race or nationality, as well as propagation of racial or national hatred and contempt, is punishable by law."

Views Conflict.

However, the report adds that "the constitution does not bar propagation of hatred and contempt on political or economic grounds, as demonstrated by the abuse and invective showered in 1927 on alleged Trotzkyists by the Soviet press," and concludes:

"The new Soviet constitution has aroused far-reaching controversy outside the U. S. S. R. Some observers hail it as an important step toward the establishment of democracy in the 'first workers' republic of the world,' while others view it as clever camouflage of the Communist dictatorship, designed to win the sympathy of Western democracies for the Soviet Union in the coming conflict with fascism.

"Stalin himself * * * told the Extraordinary All-Union Congress that the international significance of the constitution could 'hardly be overestimated,' and that it would serve as 'an indictment against fascism, testifying that socialism and democracy are invincible.' Soviet efforts to represent the U. S. S. R. as a 'socialist democracy' far in advance of nominally democratic bourgeois states clearly intended to forge common bonds between the Soviet Union and the Western powers interested in resisting German and Japanese aggression. Yet Soviet claims of 'socialist democracy' should not be dismissed as false or hypocritical merely because they do not correspond to Western concepts of democratic institutions or Trotzky's interpretation of Marxist doctrine. History has yet to prove that socialism—hitherto an ideal nowhere completely translated into terms of reality—can be established or maintained without administrative bureaucracy and political dictatorship."

Book Attacking Windsor Impounded in London

London, April 25 (U.P.).—A scramble to obtain copies of Geoffrey Dennis' book, "Coronation Commentary," to which former King Edward objected, asserting that it libeled him, was thwarted by book shops and lending libraries tonight. Dealers impounded the books at the request of the publishers, William Heinemann, Ltd.

Edward reportedly demanded through his solicitor that the book be suppressed and that the publishers print an apology. Heinemann, Ltd., refused to say whether they would accede to the duke's demand.

Chef Holds Dieting Factor in Divorces

New York, April 25 (AP).—Dieting was blamed in part for divorces tonight by George Rector, noted chef and gourmet.

Commenting at a dinner given in his honor that a friend noticed that nearly everybody in Reno, Nev., the divorce capital, was thin, Rector said:

"A hungry woman, reducing too quickly on some diet of raw vegetables and orange juice, * * * is very likely to answer back so snappishly that she will find her husband giving her several yards of train ticket and the address of a good Nevada lawyer out of sheer self-defense."

SEC Trust Inquiry Nears Last Stages

By the Associated Press.

Securities Exchange Commission officials said yesterday that they are entering the final phase of an investigation into investment trusts and probably will end it "in the summer."

The general investigation, ordered by Congress, is designed to determine the need of regulatory legislation for investment trusts.

Officials said the $100,000,000 Atlas Corporation was the major investment trust on which hearings were still to be held. Before studying the Atlas Corporation, the commission officials said, they will conclude hearings into the operations of a number of smaller trusts absorbed by Atlas.

Among them, officials said, were Goldman-Sacks Trading Coporation, Ungerleider Financial Corporation and Chatham & Phoenix Allied Corporation.

Paul P. Gourrich, chief of the research division, said studies are still under way and that no conclusions as to recommendations have yet been drafted.

and scrap iron supplies, of which Britain is running short; the war debts, concerning which London is waiting for Washington to make a first move, and currency alignment, which is waiting on greater stability of the franc.

Venice Conference Studied.

Europe also is waiting to learn the real significance of last week's Venice conference between Premier Benito Mussolini of Italy and Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg of Austria, and what is to come out of the talks between Mussolini and Gen. Hermann Wilhelm Goering, Germany's No. 2 man, now in Italy.

Il Duce's activity in negotiating with statesmen of other lands is believed to be the prelude to an Italian agreement to join a world conference.

Hitler told Lansbury Germany is willing to take part in an economic conference. Schacht indicated Germany was willing to see Russia also participate. For Poland, Foreign Minister Joseph Beck has just finished conferring with Rumanian officials. Czechoslovakian statesmen visiting London for the coronation are expected to talk trade.

Successful conclusion of the world sugar conference, now in session here, would remove another obstacle to world economic accord. The United States delegate, Norman Davis, is known to be observing the whole European scene and spending more time talking with some of Europe's biggest statesmen than the mere subject of sugar requires.

Hotels Packed as Others Decide to Remain Indoors.

The pink beauty of Washington's famed double cherry trees yesterday overcame a steady April downpour and lured more than 16,000 persons to the Speedway in East Potomac Park.

The crowd, however, was only a small part of the thousands of tourists who, having jammed the city's hotels, were disappointed by the rain. For those who stayed over until today, the weather man last night promised "clearing and slightly warmer."

For the police and the A. A. A., yesterday was a day of needed rest. There were no traffic problems directly attributable to the cherry blossoms and, as a consequence, 15 motorcycle policemen and the 12 patrolmen assigned to the Speedway merely stood around in the rain.

Officials of the A. A. A., which for several weeks has counted the visiting crowds, yesterday morning looked out the window, saw the rain, and thereupon told their "counters" to "stay in bed."

The Pennsylvania Railroad and the city's hotels reported a crowd almost as large as last week's. At that time more than 300,000 visitors, many of them without accommodations, came to the Capital. Many hotel managers declared they would be "full" for periods ranging from the next two to five weeks.

Union Station's stationmaster reported he had "had plenty to do all day." Fifteen special trains had come into the city from New York, Philadelphia and West Virginia.

FBI Is Swamped By 'Inventions' to Eradicate Crime

By the Associated Press.

Federal Bureau of Investigation officials wearily surveyed yesterday an accumulation of criminal-catching inventions offered by the lay public—two-way automobiles, gangster-eradicating chemicals, knife-edge license plates.

The devices and suggestions have flowed into the bureau in a growing stream since the Federal agent ascended to fame.

"We can hardly keep up with them," one official said. "Inventors offer cures for everything except bank robberies committed by small, left-handed men wearing green glasses, but almost always there is a 'catch' somewhere. Take that chap who told us how to catch lawbreakers with a chemical."

The inventor notified the Buffalo office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation he had a certain way of eradicating criminals. Skeptically, the agent in charge assigned a man to interview the citizen.

"Well, I'll tell you," the inventor said. "All you have to do is spray a powerful chemical on everybody in the world. If the chemical is made right it instantly will kill all criminals, but will not harm a hair on the head of any law-abiding citizen."

Federal Agent M. J. Cassidy took a deep breath.

"That's fine," he said. "How do you make this chemical?"

"Oh," replied the inventor. "I thought up the idea; it is up to you to make the chemical."

W. H. Collins Heads Holy Name Society

William H. Collins, well-known local attorney, yesterday was elected president of the Baltimore Archdiocesan Union of the Holy Name Society in Immaculate Conception Hall. A former assistant United States attorney, Collins for two years has been head of the Washington section of the Holy Name Society.

As president of the Baltimore Archdiocesan Union, he succeeds Frederick R. Uulrick. The latter yesterday was named by the Right Rev. Harry Quinn, of the Cathedral in Baltimore, as director of Junior Holy Name activities.

Delegates to yesterday's convention, 700 in number, and representing three sections of Maryland, as well as Baltimore and Washington, were welcomed by the Rev. Dr. John K. Cartwright, pastor of Immaculate Conception Church. They were addressed by Mgr. Quinn and the Rev. Ignatius Smith, O. P., dean of the new school of philosophy at Catholic University.

Senator Seeks Data On 'Pilot Fatigue'

By the Associated Press.

A Senate committee chairman yesterday urged the Government to determine scientifically whether "pilot fatigue" is responsible for airline disasters.

Senator Copeland (Democrat), New York, chairman of the Senate Air Safety Committee, said the subject was "so pressing" that a $50,000 item had been written into the pending Commerce Department appropriation bill to provide for an investigation.

The committee recommended that a group of outstanding physicians be named to help in the research work.

Flight surgeons are now practically unanimous, committee members said, that "it is not work, but worry over affairs not related to piloting nor to aeronautics that causes the drain on a pilot's human faculties, creating a menace to safety."

Daughter of Paraguayan Envoy to Austria Found Dying in Auto.

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, April 25.—Ingrid Wingreen, 29, tall, brunette daughter of Gustavo Wingreen, Paraguayan minister to Austria, died early today after being found wounded with a bullet in her head near Neunkirchen.

A gendarme discovered her on a highway in the automobile she always drove herself. She had been shot three times. She was taken to a Neunkirchen hospital, where she died without regaining consciousness.

Police said they believed she had been shot by a robber. They asserted she often picked up hitchhikers and may have given a ride to someone near Wiener-Neustadt while on her way to a Semmering mountain resort.

The week-end case was found in the road, but her purse was untouched.

Her father was away on a vacation and Miss Wingreen had been left alone.

Police said she was interested in the occult and was a member of several clubs of intellectuals.

Junior 'G-Man,' 8, Captures Escaped Federal Prisoner

Robert Schaffer, 8, has been playing "Federal agent" for a long time. He and his playmates have toy guns and disguises. His father gave them a shack fo an "office" and "jail."

Today Robert found a man in the shack. He offered him a dollar to keep quiet. The "G-man" refused the "bribe." He slipped out and hailed a police cruiser.

"I've captured a prisoner. Come quick!" he called.

Patrolman Harley Highley took the man into custory and said he was Owen Cickel, 17, of Coshocton, Ohio, who had escaped from United States deputy marshals while being transported from Pittsburgh to the Federal reformatory at Chillicothe, under sentence for automobile theft.

British Police Sift Guest List To Protect King at Coronation

By the Associated Press.

London, April 25.—British police checked thousands of names today to close every possible loophole to a coronation repetition of "the incident on Constitution Hill" last July 16.

Then watchful bobbies seized a man after a pistol slithered toward King Edward VIII as he rode by on parade. No one was hurt, but it has not been forgotten.

To complicate the situation on May 12 will be the large number of foreign visitors present and the hosts of foreign nobility and notables who will be in the procession to Westminster Abbey.

Detectives are therefore checking lists of those who will occupy grandstand seats in an effort to eliminate undesirables.

British merchants' hopes of making a profit from the coronation rise as the day approaches. Some London newspapers have predicted that the "coronation boom" in trade and industry should involve $500,000,000 of increased turnover.

Let it rain—let it pour—coronation officials say there will be no change in any part of the coronation program. Above all, it is emphasized that there will be no deviation from the procession plans. The great mass of spectators will not be disappointed—even though rain-soaked. If it rains, military units may wear overcoats, but the bands will blare and the colorful procession move just the same.

A fairly brisk business is reported in coronation rain insurance. Caterers, organizers of sports and fireworks displays, owners of grandstands, and others are insuring themselves against loss if the weather frowns on the coronation spectacle. However, applications for insurance are being carefully scrutinized to see if there is a legitimate business risk and to prevent speculation. Premiums range from $35 to $70 for each $500 worth of protection.

One of India's most prominent women, the Maharanee of Jaipur, has arrived for the coronation festivities, bringing with her a retinue of servants, bodyguards and 140 pieces of luggage. She is reputed also to have brought along a fortune in jewels which will blaze at the ceremonies. The Maharaja will come later by plane.

Fifteen hundred children from overseas will be guests of British schools during the coronation, and will form part of the coronation youth rally at Royal Albert Hall May 18. Some 8,000 children are expected to participate.

Among the coronation rehearsals now under way are those for the gold staves, the ushers who will show dukes, duchesses, bemedaled officials and all those fortunate enough to gain admittance to Westminster Abbey to their seats. The gold staves will have about three hours work early on May 12. Those bidden to the abbey have been told to arrive between 6 and 9 a. m. The ushers are receiving training in picking their way through the confusing maze of scaffolding and tiered seats in the ancient abbey.

Big Ben, London's famous clock, is being refurbished for a flood-lighted appearance at coronation time. Thick layers of London dirt and grime are being washed off, and the frame regilded.

Music rich in historial associations, including the anthem, "Zadok, the Priest," which can be traced back to the coronations of Saxon kings, will be played and sung at the coronation. A specially selected orchestra of 60 instruments under the direction of Sir Adrian Boult will play during the abbey services.

Bulging Concrete Pair Condemned As Monstrosities

Boulder, Colo., April 25 (AP).—Two bulging figures on the new Boulder High School looked down on art critics today, unaware of the whirlwind of dispute their bulges are whipping up.

"Hideous monstrosities," the school board branded the sculptures—a concrete man and woman—in ordering them removed. "They may be art, but they aren't beautiful."

"A shameful insult to the intelligent people of Boulder, as well as to the sculptor," said Edwar Davison, poet and professor of English literature at Colorado University.

The sculptor, Marvin Martin, of Denver, said he would appear before the board tomorrow night to defend his work against its 5-to-4 decision.

In modeling the figures, Martin derived his inspiration from the mountains that hem in this university city. That, he explained, was why the figures bulged so much.

Ambassador Bullitt Made 'Knight of Wine'

Nuits-Saint-Georges, France, April 25 (AP).—United States Ambassador William C. Bullitt today was a "knight of the wine bowl." He was solemnly "knighted" last night in ceremonies reminiscent of the Middle Ages. Kneeling on the floor of an ancient cellar, the ambassador was tapped on the shoulder with a gnarled vine. Then he drank from a "tastevin," or wine bowl, filled with old wine. The society was created three years ago by wine growers of Burgundy.

7 Are Rescued As Ships Ignore Sinking Craft

British Schooner Captain Says Three Vessels Passed Signals.

By the United Press.

Norfolk, Va., April 25.—A harrowing story of how they faced death at sea while passing vessels ignored the distress signal fluttering above their sinking ship, was told here today by the captain and crew of the British schooner Charles and Vernon.

Capt. S. Dunphy and his crew of six were brought ashore by the American motorship Lake Ormoc, which rescued them only a few moments before their schooner sank 6 miles off Winter Quarter Light yesterday.

Dunphy said he was unable to get the pumps working after the ship sprang a leak. Everyone on board became frightened and began praying as they hoisted a distress signal, he said. Then three vessels passed them by, apparently without noticing the distress signal.

After the crew had abandoned hope with the schooner only a few feet out of the water, the Lake Ormac caught the distress signal, turned from its course and rushed to the rescue.

In addition to Capt. Dunphy, those rescued were First Mate George A. Elford, Boatswain Edward Forgeron, Charles Moery, cook, and Samuel Sarrell, Leo Rice and Neville E. King, sailors. They planned to leave tomorrow night for Nova Scotia.

Snyder, Okla., April 25 (AP).—Fire swept the business district here today, endangering several hundred theater patrons and destroying three buildings. Fire Chief U. McCain estimated damage at $175,000 to $200,000

"The fire broke out just as the crowd was leaving the theater, said McCain. "Just then a big tank of alcohol exploded in a drug store, blowing glass and debris 70 feet into the air."

Bride's Cocktail Party Suicide Covered by Veil of Mystery

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 25.—A baffling fabric of questions answered only by grim silence formed a veil of mystery tonight around the death of Helen Kim, beautiful young actress, who killed herself as guests arrived for a cocktail party announced as "the most unusual one ever held in New York."

No explanation for her act was forthcoming from the scores of recipients of the strange invitations, whose arrival at her Park avenue apartment yesterday afternoon led to the discovery of the shapely brown-haired girl dead from stove gas.

Why did she, bride of a month of Turkish-born James Mont, fashionable interior decorator, kill herself?

Were the odd invitations, which read "make two copies of this letter immediately and mail them to two friends. * * * Be sure they will not recognize your handwriting. * * * Do not talk about * * * this letter," part of an elaborately staged demise?

Why, if they were not, did she suddenly decide in the midst of preparations for a gay party, to commit suicide?

The Daily News says a man whose name was withheld told police he and three others sent the invitations as a joke to hundreds of people, including the socially prominent Mrs. S. Stanwood Mencken, Woolworth Donahue, Prince Serge Oblensky and Elsa Maxwell.

Police denied having received any such information.

Where had Mrs. Mont been since she astonished Broadway six years ago as star of the Communist propaganda play, "Roar China?"

Was there any connection between her death and that of a youthful poet admirer who drank a glass of poisoned gin and fell dead at her feet in her Los Angeles apartment a few years ago?

After working vainly to revive her for an hour yesterday as her guests, shocked and murmuring, congregated in the apartment house lobby, police brusquely closed the case as "suicide."

Her husband, who was in his studios just off Fifth avenue when her body was found, went into seclusion after the medical examiner surrendered the body, and could not be found today.

A detective quoted him as saying he and his 25-year-old wife had quarreled yesterday morning, but he refused to talk further.

The whereabouts of a former husband, Randolph J. Thomson, English playwright, her marriage with whom was annulled five minutes before she married Mont in Brooklyn March 28, was not known.

The only information about the dead girl's activity since her sensational Broadway debut was that she had appeared in a radio series, "Roses and Drums," three years ago.

3 Killed, 2 Injured In Mine Explosion

Williamstown, Pa., April 25 (AP).—Three men were killed and two others seriously injured by an explosion in a rock tunnel of the Susquehanna Coal Co. colliery last night.

William R. Wren, deputy coroner, said he believed one of their drills struck a stick of dynamite that had failed to discharge during a previous blasting operation.

Pottsville, Pa., April 25 (AP).—A rescue crew released Stanley Poshka, 50, from an independently operated mine shaft today in which his companion, Anthony Gristitis, 52, was crushed to death in a fall of rock last night. Poshka was taken to a hospital suffering from shock and minor lacerations.

Playmates Kill Boy, 8, Because of Long Hair

Lyons, France, April 25 (AP).—Eight-year-old Paul Gignoux was stoned to death by his playmates because they did not like his long hair, police said today.

Authorities rounded up 15 small boys and girls, all under 10 years old, some under 6. They battered Paul's skull with rocks, police said. His mother refused to cut his hair.

South America Closing Gates For Japanese

Brazil and Peru Reduce Immigrant Quotas From Orient.

By the Associated Press.

The tide of emigration from Japan's crowded rice paddies to the unfilled spaces of South America, which rose rapidly until three years ago, has been cut by South American nations putting up the bars.

Brazil, whose rich coffee plantations and cotton fields had called to Japanese immigrants for a generation, this year will admit only 3,546, about one-seventh of those admitted when the tide was at full flow.

Down in Rio de Janeiro for years they have been watching the efforts of Tsukasa Uetsuka, former member of the Tokyo Parliament and parliamentary councilor of Japan's finance ministry, to build a vast Japanese Utopia in the Amazon Basin.

But the new restrictions have dealt a severe blow to his plans.

Grants Revoked.

Brazil, where most of the approximately 225,000 Japanese in South America are concentrated, recently revoked a jungle land grant of about 2,000,000 acres which had been given Uetsuka in the huge state of Amazonas.

Even before this Brazil had imposed new immigration restrictions under which only about 3,400 Japanese were permitted to enter yearly. The Brazilian ministry of labor set Japan's 1937 quota on the basis of a constitutional law adopted in 1935, limiting immigrants from any one country to 2 per cent of the total immigration from that country during the past 50 years.

Japan protested this law was unfair to her, because the bulk of her emigration to Brazil had come within the last ten years.

Peru, where the next greatest number of Japanese are settled in South America, has set up barriers even more stringent than Brazil's. The Lima government was alarmed when a year ago it found of 43,317 foreign colonists in the country, 22,560 were Japanese.

Peru permitted entry of two immigrants per year for each thousand of each nationality then in Peru, but fixed the maximum for each nationality at 16,000. The Japanese total already is well over that figure; hence no new immigrants are admitted. Moreover, a Japanese leaving Peru can not return so long as the total of his compatriots there remains over the 16,000 mark.

Before South American governments acted to limit the flow, that continent had drawn more Japanese colonists than any other region except Manchuria, separated from Japan only by a narrow sea. The tide to South America had even surpassed the rush of Japanese farmers to California in the years about the turn of the century.

Half-Million in Manchuria.

The Japanese population of Manchuria (including Japan's leased territory of Kwantung as well as Manchukuo), has passed the half-million mark, having more than doubled since the Japanese conquest began in 1931. Migration to Manchuria has been generously supported by the Tokyo government—as was migration to Brazil in former years.

The tide of Japanese emigration swerved to South America after the United States began to put up the bars, with the so-called gentlemen's agreement of 1907.

Early in the twentieth century, Japanese migrated in large numbers to Mexico. Since then emigration to Mexico has decreased and now is almost negligible. Japan sets its population there at 5,500.

Brazil, 173,500; Peru, 21,127; Argentina, where Japanese immigration had declined sharply, 5,492; Bolivia, 761; Chile, 638, and Colombia, 169.

Mine Union Drive Opened in Harlan Under Wagner Act

Evarts, Ky., April 25 (AP).—Heralding the Wagner labor relations act as the "savior of democracy in Harlan County," the United Mine Workers of America fired the opening gun here today in a campaign to unionize Harlan County coal mines within the next 60 days.

International representatives of the union, leading a score of organizers, announced tonight they had met with "unexpected success" and had already signed up approximately 1,000 miners.

George J. Titler, of Chattanooga, Tenn., international representative, declared:

"Our goal is 16,000 members in all the mines of Harlan County within the next 60 days. By the end of this week we expect to have local unions organized in eight mines."

The opening rally in the union's membership drive was held today in a field just a stone's throw away from the scene of a clash between miners and officers in May, 1931, in which four men were slain and for which two former union officials are serving life sentences.

Truce Reached To Reopen Ford Plant in West

Union and Company Heads Agree on Terms in California.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Calif., April 25.—Union and company officials today announced an agreement to reopen tomorrow the Ford motor assembly plant, tied up by a short sit-down strike Friday.

Ed Hall, vice president of the United Automobile Workers, who flew here from Detroit, said the company agreed not to discriminate against any man for union affiliation or union activity, and that it would recognize seniority rights.

Clarence Bullwinkle, plant superintendent, confirmed the agreement and said operations would be resumed tomorrow.

The agreement was reached in a conference of union leaders and unidentified company executives who flew here from Detroit.

Hall did not say whether the agreement constituted company recognition of the union as the bargaining agency for plant workers, a matter which Henry Ford recently said he would not concede.

Hall said company and shop stewards and the local plant management would negotiate on grievances between employer and employe.

Prior to the conference with Ford officials Hall reported he had "definite assurances" from the Ford Co. that its representatives would meet with employe delegates and hear their grievances, which centered about asserted discrimination against 12 workers.

"This isn't by any means the first strike in a Ford plant," said Hall. "They fired 350 men in the Kansas City plant. The union struck and stayed out until the 350 men had been reinstated. There were two other tieups that we fixed, too.

"Henry Ford likes to talk about not dealing with the union, but he's doing it every day."

Labor Chief Fears Strife.

Columbia, S. C., April 25 (U.P.).—Predicting strikes and strife as an outgrowth of rival drives of the American Federation of Labor and the Committee for Industrial Organization, John W. Nates resigned tonight as president of the South Carolina Federation of Labor.

His resignation was tendered as C. I. O. and A. F. of L. organizers moved into South Carolina in rival drives for unionization of thousands of textile workers.

Nates said his resignation was prompted by belief that labor disputes and strikes will occur "because of the representatives of the C. I. O. and A. F. of L. being engaged in an organization campaign in this State."

William Mitch, president of the Alabama Federation of Labor and district president of the United Mine Workers of America, was deposed as federation chief at Birmingham two weeks ago. His ouster was ordered by A. F. of L. leaders seeking to "purge" federation ranks of C. I. O. officers and unions.

increase of 20 cents an hour for all its members, because, it claimed, one railroad had granted more advantageous terms to pier freight handlers belonging to the International Longshoremen's Association.

Demand Recognition.

Pittsburgh, April 25 (U.P.).—The United Electrical and Radio Workers, affiliate of the Committee for Industrial Organization, tonight demanded recognition as the sole bargaining agency for the 45,000 employes of Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.

Union delegates representing ten Westinghouse plants drafted a letter to A. W. Robertson, chairman of the board of Westinghouse, asking a joint meeting "for the purpose of setting up machinery for collective bargaining in accordance with the law."

Rivals Seek Support.

Detroit, April 25 (U.P.).—United Automobile Workers and the new American Labor League carried separate appeals to the working man tonight as the former sought support in an impending test of its strength and the latter attempted to swell its membership.

In a mass meeting at Slovak Hall, U. A. W. A. leaders urged Packard Motor Co. workers to vote for the union as sole collective bargaining agency in an election to be conducted next Wednesday.

In another hall, Daniel M. Robins, president of the A. L. L., and other national officers explained the merits of the new incorporated union to an audience of fewer than 100.

Shoe Truce Predicted.

Lewiston, Me., April 25 (AP).—Peace overtures by a Federal mediator held out the prospect today of further negotiations toward settlement of the Lewsiton-Auburn general shoe strike. Thomas J. Williams, United States Department of Labor concilator, said he hoped to hear soon from counsel of manufacturers regarding further conferences. Williams said a seven-hour meeting yesterday resulted in "definite progress."

Election Fraud Cleanup to Take 3-Year Inquiry

Judge Says Kansas City Study May Require Many Grand Juries.

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, April 25.—Prison bars will cast their shadowy threat over Kansas City's voting machinery for perhaps three years to come.

A gray-haired Federal jurist who last December directed an ever-widening investigation of election frauds here predicted today that grand juries may require that much more time to sift the mass of evidence still awaiting study.

The judge, Aubert L. Reeves, dismissed one grand jury Saturday—the first called in the November 3 election "purge." He has called another for May 4. It will sit until next November.

"It is my information," Judge Reeves said, "that the extent of the alleged vote frauds will require several terms of grand juries to cover them all.

"I would not be surprised to see the investigation continue as long as the three-year statute of limitations permits."

The first jury indicted 126 election officials and party workers. Of these 43 already have faced trial in six groups. Thirty-two were convicted and given sentences ranging from three years in prison to one year on probation. Eight pleaded no defense and were placed on probation. A mistrial was declared in the case of three defendants.

Not a single defendant has yet been acquitted.

But, spectacular as have been what Judge Reeves called "the revelations of wholesale election frauds" there is an even more spectacular element in the Kansas City political picture. That element is a personality—the personality of J. T. "Boss" Pendergast, Democratic leader.

Only once has the name of Pendergast been spoken in court and then it was ruled out speedily, except for the intials "T. J."

Mrs. Ruth Hogendorn, an election official and Government witness at the third trial, told of a dark-complexioned, extremely accommodating man who appeared at intervals at her polling place November 3.

She said she heard him tell Gilbert Stevens, Democratic precinct captain, not to get too nervous. Later she said James E. Maxey, Republican judge, told her the man was "from T. J.'s office." She added her assumption that "T. J." was Pendergast, but the assumption was ruled out.

On the efficiency of his organization Pendergast bases his rise to a sponsor of Governors and Senators—not to mention smaller political fry.

"Feed 'Em and Vote 'Em."

"The fundamental secret," he once told an interviewer, "is to get the vote registered—and then get it out after it's registered." His formula for getting the vote "out" is the essence of simplicity:

"When a poor man comes to old Tom's boys for help, we don't make one of those ——— ——— investigations like these city charities. No, we feed 'em and we vote 'em."

United States District Attorney Maurice M. Milligan, chief Federal prosecutor, runs a close second, incidentally, to Pendergast in the matter of silence.

"My job is to prosecute cases, not to predict or hold post mortems," he says.

Since a citizen's committee first laid a mass of fraud charges before Judge Reeves, Milligan said a constant stream of letters has been received, some anonymous, some signed, some complaining about ballot irregularities. Most of the complaints are turned over to the Federal Bureau of Investigation which runs them down in its customary secret fashion.

As yet none of the complaints has brought within reach of the investigation those to whom Judge Reeves referred when he admonished the first grand jury:

"Reach for all, even if they are found in high places."

But with each succeeding grand jury, the judge observed, investigators progress "deeper and deeper."

Japan Adopts Stunts To Bring Out Voters

Tokyo, April 25 (AP).—Although Japan's general election is only five days away, the public is so apathetic toward the contest that candidates have resorted to stunts such as using women speakers to draw hearers to their meetings.

April 30 the electorate will choose a new House of Representatives to replace that dissolved by imperial decree March 31.

Women do not vote in Japan and hitherto have taken no part in politics. Their appearance on election platforms, therefore, has proved a novelty that attracts a few more to candidates' meetings.

B. and O. Inaugurates Nurse Train Service

Baltimore, April 26 (AP).—The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad inaugurated a nurse-stewardess service today on its New York-Chicago run. A new B. & O. train, the Shenandoah, is the first regularly scheduled train in the East to have such a service, although some Western lines installed it two years ago.

Miss Bernyce Etna Young was the first stewardess to serve on the Shenandoah. She and four other young women are charged with responsibility for the passengers' comfort and are prepared to render first aid in emergencies.

Charge Law Violated.

At Salamanca an insurgent communiqe said the protest to Britain would charge "violation of international law" by British naval vessels in watching over the foodships which reached Bilbao.

The communique said the Hood and the destroyer Firedrake placed themselves between the freighters and the insurgent cruiser Almirante Cervera in Spanish territorial waters, making it impossible for the cruiser to fire on the freighters without danger of hitting the naval ships.

Insurgent army headquarters announced that one of the columns of Gen. Emilio Mola, commanding the driveon Bilbao, occupied Mount Saint Maria, commanding the whole valley in which Eibar lies and making the fall of that munitions manufacturing town—18 miles southeast of Bilbao—imminent.

Earlier today Gen. Mola's forces, including 1,500 Italian artillerymen and strong units of Moorish cavalrymen, drove to wkithin 3 miles of Durango.

Refugees Fleeing.

The roads leading into the Basque capital, Spain's fourth largest city, were jammed with refugees. It was estimated that Bilbao's population, already swollen to 400,000, would be increased by 50,000 more to feed.

A government communique passed over the threat to Durango in silence.

In Vitorio, headquarters for Gen. Mola's drive, insurgents said yesterday's successes constituted the greatest victory in the Bilbao campaign. They reported capture of seven towns and villages, including the important El Orrio.

Official dispatches said the battle along the semicircular El Orrio front resulted in complete route of the Basques.

The Basque resistence was reported so shattered that whole companies surrendered. One thousand captives were taken when El Orrio fell. Vast quantities of material also were captured, including three batteries of artillery and 50 machine guns.

Madrid, April 25 (AP).—Insurgent gunners poured shells into the heart of Madrid again today, swelling the casualty list which has mounted into the hundreds in the 12-day bombardment.

Chile Break Eminent.

London (Monday), April 26 (U.P.). Diplomats said today that Chile for the past 48 hours has been on the verge of severing diplomatic relations with the Spanish Loyalist government because of its action in declaring Chilean Ambassador Aurelio Nunez Morgada persona no grata.

The Santiago government threatened to hand the Spanish Ambassador his passports, but is awaiting Nunez Morgada's report before taking final action. The Spanish loyalists accused Nunez Morgada of smuggling. He is now safely aboard the Argentine cruiser Tucuman, en route to Marseille, France.

Old Point Comfort, Va., April 25. A historic tour through Virginia's Tidewater Peninsula, with visits to restored Williamsburg, Revolutionary battlefields at Yorktown and Jamestown, concluded the two-day junket of Senators and Representatives and their families to the Old Dominion State.

The party of 217, headed by Vice President Garner and Senate Majority Leader Robinson, left Washington Friday night, inspected Langley Feld and other military posts yesterday, and are due to arrive at Washington by steamer early tomorrow morning.

Today's trip was made without the Vice President and Senator Robinson, however, who quietly disappeared for a solid day of fresh-water fishing near Morrison, Va. The Vice President refused to discuss his angling luck, but both he and the Senator came back with strings of fish.

At Jamestown, the cavalcade paused long enough for an inspection of a replica of the original church built by early settlers. There, on the site where the first representative legislative assembly in the New World was held 318 years ago, Representatives and Senators stood with uncovered heads as they heard Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin, Williamsburg pastor, read the minutes of the first meeting of the burgesses, July 30, 1619.

Earlier, the party drove over the historic battlefield at Yorktown and inspected the house where the articles of surrender were drawn up. The party also visited the Naval Mine Depot near Yorktown.

At Williamsburg, congressional restraint was thrown to the winds as Representative Louis C. Rabaut (Democrat), of Michigan, led the party in 'Carry Me Back to Ole Virginny," dedicated to William and Mary College, the party's host at luncheon.

Previously the group had been shown through the restored buildings of the Colonial Settlement, spending more than an hour in examining the Governor's Palace and the Capitol.

Father Divine's 'Angels' Fly From His Makeshift 'Heavens'

By the Associated Press.

Kingston, N. Y., April 25.—Father Major J. Divine, colored cultist called "God" by his followers, reassured his wavering Ulster County flock with promises of a "model paradise" there.

Even as some of his "angels" packed their meager belongings and left various "extension heavens" for home, he announced, through his attorney, Arthur A. Madison, a long-term land-acquisition and development program.

Following a hurried "secret" conference with various "head angels," called after Sheriff Abram F. Molyneau estimated that "nearly 50" of them had left for home, Madison said:

"We plan to purchase all land in Ulster County that we can get and turn it into a model territory where we will live on a community basis.

"We are going to tear down the old buildings at our present heavens and build new ones," he said. "We will build warehouses, canneries, model dairy farms and our long-term program calls for making our own clothing and motor cars."

Madison promised a "report to the rest of the world on the state of our affairs" at an international convention in 1940.

He said the "official headquarters" of the International World Peace Movement, the name adopted by Father Divine's followers, would be at Greenkill Park, near here, but that it would still be known as an extension heaven.

The "main heaven," he said, would be retained in Harlem.

Meantime, inquiry as to the whereabouts of Faithful Mary, a Divine lieutenant whose open break with her leader is blamed by some for the exodus of "angles," brought only a shake of the head from the "angels."

The Harlem cult leader came here yesterday following a fire which leveled the New Paltz heaven and immediately began to visit other heavens and talk to his flock.

Husband Kills Wife, 2 Others And Ends Life

By the Associated Press.

Portsmouth, Ohio, April 25.—John Owens, 22-year-old bartender, shot and killed his wife and two members of her family today and then ended his own life with poison, Sheriff Earl Brandel said. "Papa shot mama and grandma," Janet Marie, 3-year-old daughter of the Owenses, told police.

Benjamin B. White, 54-year-old father of Mrs. Owens, suffered critical wounds in the shotgun fusillade which killed his daughter, Sarah White Owens, 23; his wife, Mrs. Catherine White, 54, and a son of the Whites, Chester White, 20. Harry Hughes, 17, a neighbor, received minor injuries.

Owens' body was found several hours after the shooting, in the room of a girl who asked a taxicab driver to notify ocers ffiof Owens' whereabouts, and then disappeaed.

Child Not Harmed.

Janet Marie, daughter of the Owenses, was not harmed. The child was crying in the White home when police arrived there. The bodies of her mother and grandmother were in the kitchen, and that of her uncle was in a bedroom.

Beside Owens' body police found a note addressed to Miss Thelma Kirker, 24, a waitress, in whose room he died.

The note said:

"Was here at 5 till 10 this morning. Be sure mother gets the baby. Tell them all good luck. I love you. P. S.—If you think it don't take nerve, just try it."

The Owens family had lived in the Whites' four-room cotage since the recent Ohio River flood, which did many hundred thousand dollars' damage to Portsmouth.

Sheriff Brandel and Coroner J. D. Rose said neighbors and relatives told them they had seen no previous indication of a domestic rift in the Owens family.

The officers said investigation disclosed that Owens had been drinking Saturday night. He left the White home at 6 a. m. today and obtained his shotgun an hour later from a friend with whom he had left it during the flood, they said.

About 8:30 a. m. he returned home and found his wife and her mother at breakfast. Both were shot in the head at close range; his brother-in-law, sleeping in a bedroom, received a third charge.

The father-in-law, who had been working in the yard, rushed into the house, but ran for help when he found the bodies.

Religious Racket.

It was an unusual coincidence that found Father Divine in New York and Aimee Semple McPherson in California emerging from court difficulties on precisely the same day. But it was no surprise to find the two evangelists prominent somewhere in the American scene. "Bible floggers" have been a dominant characteristic of this country since its earliest days.

If it could be traced, doubtless the origin of the strange business of exhorting men at so much a head would be found in the Nation's historic enthusiasm for freedom of worship. That does not make religious freedom the less desirable, but it does emphasize the need for vigilance against quackery in this field. What was once a serious effort to promote religion through appeals to emotion has degenerated into a shameless trick of promoting religionists through devices bordering on, and often outdoing, burlesque. The honest, even though sometimes hysterical, revival meetings of the last century have led today to psychopathic, if not vicious, organizations and assemblies.

Father Divine and his "angels" represent the best, or worst, example of this. An undersized Negro from Georgia, he is said to have learned from a Baltimore evangelist the exciting technique of playing "God" to thousands (he claims millions) of persons, both white and colored. He rides in high-powered automobiles, he visits branch "heavens" scattered throughout the country, he lives well on fried chicken and yams.

Wherever he goes, disciples troop after him chanting, "Peace, it's a wonderful thing." A New York policeman, however, suggested a more realistic variation on hearing the ecstatic chorus in a Harlem court: "Peace, it's a swell racket."

The Budget And Congress.

When the executive budget system was adopted, in 1921, hopes were high that it would eliminate pork-barrel appropriations and emancipate Congressmen from the pressure of special interests and subsidy seekers.

The defeat of those expectations is attributed by Walter Lippmann, in an important speech at Johns Hopkins University last week, largely to the defects of our budget-making procedure. Mr. Lippmann's conception of a "true" executive budget is one which permits of no increases in appropriations requested, and no additions by Congress unless new taxes are voted to cover them. The right of Congress to change the budgetary items would be limited to striking out or reducing estimates.

Undoubtedly a budget of this sort would make it easier to put through a program of economy. It would also free the individual Congressman from pressures to secure special favors for his constituents and would enable him to concentrate on larger questions of national policy. But it would be dangerous to assume that any change in budgetary practice will of itself provide adequate safeguards against governmental extravagance.

The present quicksand of deficit financing would not have been avoided under a rigid executive budget limiting legislative revisions to cuts in appropriations. The belief that the executive budget is a guarantee against extravagance is based upon the assumption that Congress is more susceptible to squandering than the executive branch of Government. At the present moment that appears to be the case, but in recent years it has not been so.

It is also necessary to remember that under our system of separation of powers Congress has a responsibility for initiating revenue bills and passing upon appropriation measures which it cannot altogether abdicate in favor of the executive. Under the English system, to which Mr. Lippmann refers, the government in power is directly responsible to Parliament and holds office at its pleasure. Hence, the rigid executive budget is there at all times subject to legislative control of an indirect sort. And English governments have been overthrown partly because their budgets were regarded as undesirably parsimonious on such social expenditures as unemployment relief.

The executive budget will be no panacea unless the executive and legislative branches of Government co-operate in developing and maintaining sound financial practices. And that calls for mutual respect and forbearance. If the budget is carefully framed, with estimates based upon experience rather than hope, Congress will be disposed to accept them as authoritative. If the Administration consistently discourages waste and spending beyond revenues, there will be effective pressure on Congress to do likewise regardless of influences from "back home."

The success of any budgetary system depends to a large extent upon the attitude of both the appropriating and the spending branches of Government. The checks and balances designed to prevent excesses from either side can not be very helpful if the will and desire to co-operate are lacking. President Roosevelt has now strongly urged the Congress to mark the advent of recovery by putting an end to deficit financing. Congress can demonstrate the essential strength of the American system by following this wise executive advice.

Why Not A Plebiscite?

In conceding an unfavorable report from the Senate Judiciary Committee on the President's court reorganization bill, Senator Ashurst made a desperate effort to show that the minority will reflect the popular view. No doubt his purpose was to afflict opponents of the measure with that sickening feeling known only to politicans who begin to lose the sympathy of the folks back home. But the rebound from his gesture seems to strike friends of the measure much harder than the gesture strikes its foes.

"Everybody knew from the start," said Chairman Ashurst, "that the committee was not for this bill." That statement might be challenged. But the significant part of the Senator's pronouncement is that "the sober second judgment" of the country will rally support in favor of the plan. He assumes that a great majority of the people will rush to the aid of the President and thus bring doubtful Senators into line.

Before President Roosevelt advised packing the Supreme Court as a means of altering its opinions Senator Ashurst regarded that scheme as a "reckless foray." Now he is leading the foray in the Senate. One whose convictions are subjected to such loose shifting is likely to put altogether too much credence in the willingness of other Senators to jump through political hoops. Fortunately, a majority of the committee members are following their own sincere convictions more closely than temporary trends of opinion.

But one aspect of Senator Ashurst's comment is of signal importance. If the matter could be submitted to a plebiscite, he said, it would be adopted by all but six States in the Union, including New York and Pennsylvania. Why does he say "if" it could be submitted to a plebiscite? The Senator knows very well that the proposal could be submitted to the voters, for until February 5 he was a strong advocate of constitutional amendment as the only legitimate means of effecting basic changes in our system of government.

If 42 States would support the President's plan through constitutional conventions called for that special purpose, there can be no excuse whatever for packing the court without the people's consent. The only plausible argument for remodeling a major branch in the Federal Government by simple legislation is that a constitutional amendment for that purpose might be blocked by 13 or more States. But Senator Ashurst contends that only six States would oppose it.

Since the Administration is relying upon this alleged public support, why shouldn't the issue be placed directly before the people in the way which the Constitution provides? That is the chief issue in the whole controversy. Changes which might be extremely dangerous if effected by the President and Congress would be in an entirely different class if effected by the Nation's voters, acting in accord with established principles.

Presumably Senator Ashurst had no intention of challenging the President to let the people decide this momentous issue. But that is certainly the effect of his comments. If the President fails to accept this challenge, he will be left in the embarrassing position of rejecting a plebiscite in favor of executive domination and political pressure.

The Search For Local Taxes.

Objections may be raised against taxes of every sort. When funds must be obtained, however, it is not a question of finding a tax that will please every one, but of tapping available sources of revenue in a way that will be most equitable from the community viewpoint. Apparently it was this line of reasoning which has led to the proposal of four new levies by the District Commissioners.

A considerable number of tax bills for the District have been introduced in the House. Of course, it is not anticipated that all of them will be enacted. When the Commissioners and experts thoroughly familiar with the present tax structure choose measures from that list for approval, or bring forth new plans of their own, their advice should be one of the vital factors in shaping the tax program.

The proposed tax on tobacco is likely to arouse protests because of the high levies already imposed on that commodity by the Federal Government. In principle it is highly desirable to keep the fields of national and local taxation separated so far as that is practicable. But the Federal Government has tapped many sources of revenue formerly reserved to the States. Since real property is already overtaxed, there are not many fruitful sources of revenue to which the States and local governments may turn without encroaching upon Federal levies.

Many of the States have adopted income taxes in recent years. A similar levy for the District will doubtless attain considerable support in Congress. But its application would be very difficult. How can a line be drawn between Government officials who should pay the tax and others who should be exempt because their residence is elsewhere? Unless some practical means of solving this problem can be found the income tax is not likely to be applied.

That handicap may have to be overcome by turning to other forms of taxation. Since Washington has a large transient population that now pays very little toward the maintenance of the city, sales taxes on selected items would doubtless prove more equitable than higher levies on real estate.

Belgium In The Same Old Role.

By joint action of Great Britain and France, Belgium has been released from her Locarno Treaty commitments and, by implication, from her commitments as the erstwhile ally of France as well. Her own territorial integrity will continue to be guaranteed by the two great democracies of western Europe. But from now on Belgium will be under no legal compulsion to aid either of these nations in the event of an attack by a third power.

At first glance it would seem there is substance to the contention now being advanced in Belgium that the little kingdom has made the "political bargain of the century." Not every nation is permitted to eat its cake and have it, too; to be guaranteed against outside attack without having to undertake reciprocal obligations vis-a-vis its guarantors. But the actual reality concerning Belgium's seeming reversion to the status of neutral is by no means as glamorous as the surface indications may lead one to believe.

In the first place, the neutrality which Belgium is now to enjoy is by no means complete. As part of the bargain, she has given Great Britain and France renewed assurances of her "fidelity to the League of Nations and to the obligations which it involves for members of the League." This means that, at some future time, the kingdom may, despite its neutrality, have to join forces with other League nations in punishing an aggressor. At least it may be compelled to permit French and British troops to cross its territory. With the League momentarily in eclipse, such a development is somewhat remote. Yet there is no telling how soon new life may be breathed into the Geneva organization.

Of more immediate importance as a factor tending to limit Belgium's presumed neutrality is the circumstance that, in the Anglo-French declaration, the existence of a defensive alliance between France and Great Britain is explicitly stated. Should either nation be attacked by Germany, the two democracies are pledged to join forces to resist such aggression.

Does this concern Belgium? Outwardly not at all. Yet in view of the existence of the Maginot chain of fortifications along France's eastern border, which makes a direct German thrust into France unlikely, Belgium, fully as much as in 1914, is the most feasible path from Germany into France.

That is why, before releasing Belgium from its Locarno Treaty obligations, Great Britain and France demanded and received from the Brussels government assurances that Belgium will build up its defenses so as to forestall the possibility of Belgian territory being used as a base of operations by the Third Reich.

Paris and London realize, what a large section of Belgian public opinion now chooses to ignore, that treaty or no treaty, Belgium's fate is inextricably linked with that of Great Britain and France; that the little kingdom can remain at peace only if western Europe remains at peace. The British and French governments, therefore, are not prepared to permit Belgium to rest on its oars in matters of defense preparations. Belgium, France and Great Britain were allies once; technically the tripartite alliance is no more; but who knows when the old relationship may have to be restored?

In olden days when a monarch died, the cry was: "The king is dead! Long live the king!" By the same token the Franco-Belgian-British alliance, having been ostentatiously thrown out of the window, returned quietly through the door.

A statistician reports that the depression cost the world $149,000,000,000. It wasn't worth it.

300,000 To Be Murdered.

From the Detroit News.

Although dimly aware of the facts before, because of its mathematical definiteness, we find something sharply arresting in the statement of a Department of Justice official that 300,000 persons now living in this country will some day be murdered.

This means that in spite of all the education, the moral and religious training, the attempts to improve those social conditions which may incite to violence, and the likelihood of punishment for murderous acts, one out of every 400 of us is almost certain to be shot, stabbed, poisoned, choked, or blackjacked, and that approximately another one of each 400 is destined to be the instrument of our unexpected and unpleasant demise.

Besides provoking a shudder at the thought of our own danger when walking home in the dark, these figures should inspire some very sober thought. Just what stage of growth and evolution have human beings reached? Evidently it is a discouragingly low one.

Bitter!

The Tax System.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The trouble in the social and industrial order of our day was not caused by the Supreme Court or the Constitution and cannot be remedied by exercising political control over the judiciary. The cause of the unrest in which class consciousness and class antagonisms are engendered lies deep down in fundamental economic law and cannot be cured by any means except the discovery of the cause and its removal.

Everything that has a right to exist in this world has a legitimate and natural source of supply. The supply for individual man consists of the product of his labor when freely applied to land to the use of which all have an equal right. The supply for collective man, that is society, consists of the value of land due to, or created by, population. Here is fundamental economic law. We have a clear-cut distinction between the supply for individual man and the social supply and if this distinction is clearly understood and preserved no inharmonious social or industrial conditions will eventuate.

The remedy, therefore, for all our economic troubles can be secured by freeing the land, which can easily be done by simply reforming our system of taxation. The communal value of land, or the value due to population, is a capital investment belonging to all the people and the interest on this investment can be collected periodically. This constitutes the only legitimate and scientific source of public revenue and is adequate for all necessary expenditures. Taxation on private property, that is, on those things that are produced by labor, is not justified in ethics since the product of labor rightfully belongs to individual man.

HENRY LINCOLN PECKHAM.
Washington.

Midshipman's View.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Off and on during the past few weeks letters have appeared in one of your columns analogous to the Civil War. Approximately 72 years ago this was ended and the North and South began to co-operate with one another to rebuild their shattered finances and businesses, and to repair the Government to a certain extent.

As a result of this re-establishment of the Nation, we are ranked today as one of the foremost of the world powers. We are perhaps the richest country in the world and it is common knowledge that foreign countries are jealous of this natural prosperity which we enjoy.

Now after 72 years, men and women, whom I dare say, had no part in this war, start up a hue and cry over slanders at their respective Civil War heroes.

The fault, as I see it, lies on both sides. Why can't people lay down past grievances and forget them? Why must old wrongs, since righted, be brought again before the public eye reminding the Nation of that regrettable instance in which brothers fought brothers, and fathers fought sons? I for one, have no desire to listen to their insignificant murmurings.

Let the "J. C. R.'s," the "P. C.'s" and the "Virginians'," as they style themselves, lay down their prejudices of a by-gone era and turn their respective talents towards the betterment of the future.

Ours is a glorious Nation, with a glorious past. Let us not fail future generations by laying down the torch of progress but let us feed its flame and light the way to a better life.

Inflation's Effect.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On April 1, I received a $200 raise in annual salary. This was a raise of four and one-half per cent, and was the first raise I had received in a year. During the year, my living expenses had increased 10 per cent. Since it takes all I make to pay my living expenses, I am just exactly five and one-half per cent worse off than I was a year ago.

My living expenses were increased for no other reason than that the prices of things I have to buy for myself and family have gone up. What caused these prices to rise faster than my salary has risen? I can't answer this question, but every economist whom I have read says that this always occurs during every period of inflation, and they all agree that we are now in a period of inflation which will become more acute as time goes on.

Now, what caused the inflation? The answer of all economists is the excessive Government spending, high taxes and the badly unbalanced Federal budget. There is no doubt in my mind that this answer is correct, and the worst of it is that I don't believe that the present Administration will ever stop excessive spending, reduce taxes or balance the budget. In fact, I think more taxes will be levied.

It seems, therefore, that I will be up against it more and more for several years, and I just wonder how many millions there are like me. CANUTE.

Washington, April 18.

To Balance The Budget

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: At this time when we hear so much discussion in regard to balancing the budget, all Americans would like to have a feeling of security and peace of mind concerning national affairs and the safety of our country now and in the future for the coming generation.

Therefore I would like to propose a suggestion inspired by a thought that came to me in the quiet of the night. It is this. Every American should give one dollar a year until the budget is balanced. It would not be much of a tax on anyone and a very easy and sure way of raising money.

It would definitely give our wonderful America a more secure foundation and we as Americans are individually responsible for the welfare of our country. Certainly it would bring about a feeling of good will and united patriotism which is needed today, of all working together towards one goal for the good of our Nation.

Furniture At Mount Vernon.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: While it is painful to bring up again the subject of Mount Vernon, nevertheless, any patriotic person who is acquainted with furniture feels impelled to make a statement.

Too much praise cannot be accorded the ladies in charge of Mount Vernon for their efficient and persistent labors. The small charge for admission should be gratefully paid by any visitor. One finds it difficult to imagine how a larger number of sightseers could be accommodated.

The grounds and the buildings have been restored with conservatism and taste and knowledge and they are altogether satisfactory and beautiful. The furnishings for the most part are just what one would wish to see. The few exceptions, however, are a fly in the ointment and to the initiated they are distressing and to the merely curious, ridiculous.

We are presuming that Washington would scarcely buy any furniture later than about 1790. Anything later would be admitted only on more direct worthy evidence than is at present available. It is quite unreasonable to presume that after that date much if any new furniture would be brought in. Taking that date as a basis, we find ourselves at about the close of the Hepplewhite period and the beginning of the Sheraton. We cannot be very precise. It is also to be considered that the house would naturally contain furniture of the early Georgian and the Chippendale period. Anything not included in these four periods therefore should be rigidly ruled out as affording too much contrast and being less worthy. It is greatly to be feared that the powers that be have either yielded to poor advice or unreliable tradition, in a few instances.

The most glaring anachronisms are two horizontally long gilded looking glasses in the chambers. These could not possibly have been made under 20 years after Washington's death, and they are thoroughly meretricious, belonging to the degraded empire design of split turnings. Possibly they were put in under the impression that it was necessary to have glasses of that shape. But in the good period that shape was very rare, and the natural glass in such a shape, in such a position could be anything from Queen Anne down through the Hepplewhite, vertically long, though Chippendale glasses of the horizontally long shape could be found. To those who know, these glasses are a shock.

There is in the music room a harpsichord which may fairly be referred to the Chippendale style. There is in front of it a late Empire music chair which could never have been intended originally. In fact there is no probability that a swivel chair was used.

In the dining room there was formerly an Empire table, which even now appears on the postals sold. Perhaps it was not old, but, if so, it was tolerable. The table at present in position is quite an ordinary heavy legged affair, such as can be picked up in a second-hand shop even now. Whenever it was made, it really represents the style of 1820 or later. The other articles in the house are quite delightful with the exception of some late Empire chairs, which we hope may sometime have their places taken by somewhat earlier specimens.

In the old kitchen, however, one is surprised to find that there is not a quarter of the implements used at that period. The expert knowledge of house hardware is rare and apparently no use has been made of it. For instance, the roasting jack is so arranged that the crane could not possibly be swung out into the room. That is the jack and the crane were not adapted. If the crane were hung from the other side, or some other adjustment were made, the fireplace would be practicable, which it is not now.

And whence came the huge andirons, over which a big log could not possibly be raised? This is the commonest of all errors, to presume that a massive pair of andirons should be placed in a kitchen fireplace. And where are the various broilers and forks and numerous other utensils which ought to line the chimney tree or fill various racks? One does not observe a single meat fork. The bad joke of the kitchen, however, is a modern iron teakettle hung on the crane which could readily be bought for a single admission fee. A teakettle with a swivel lever made especially for use to pour from a crane is a well-known article.

As to the walls of this kitchen being immaculate white, perhaps it is not worth while to comment, but how long would they remain so in use? Would not a neutral tint or a natural color look more human and realistic?

Now, all the changes necessary for house and kitchen would not require a half day's average admission fee and would make the entire setting harmonious. At present these few anachronisms are like a harshly discordant note in music. It may be said that most people do not know, but that reply would brush away the necessity for any restoration at all.

As so much has been done and so much care and devotion has been shown, it is a great pity that these discordances should not be abolished without delay.

Thomas Mann And Politics

Excerpts from an address by the distinguished German novelist, an exile from his country, delivered at a recent assembly of the graduate faculty of political and social science of the New School for Social Research in New York City.

IT is easy enough to say that the imaginative writer has nothing to do with politics; that he can entirely dissociate himself from them, and that he actually derogates from his high calling by paying any attention to political developments. That is nonsense. For firstly—as if any imaginative writer would interfere in politics today wantonly or for his own pleasure. As if it were not a matter of the direst necessity, a despairing protest against the wicked aggressions carried out by politics upon his most sacred self, upon spiritual freedom, upon mankind itself.

Every man, and especially the writer, must realize that they involve his spiritual welfare—let us not shirk the religious word—the salvation of his soul. I am convinced that the writer who refuses to take a stand in these vital questions of political faith, who refuses to face the question of mankind in its political form, and is a traitor to man's spirit is a lost man.

I am no scholar and, to be honest, I must confess that I have always loved knowledge merely as a means to an end—a means to the end of creative achievement. But truth I love for its own sake as only a scholar can love it.

"What is truth?" is the question put not only by jesting Pilate, but by philosophy itself, by the mind of man taking critical stock of itself. That mind is ready to accept life, admits that life must have the truth that helps and furthers it. Only that is true which furthers life. That principle may stand. But if we are not to abandon morality altogether and sink into an abyss of cynicism we must supplement it by the other principle, "Only truth furthers life."

A task for care and courage—that is how this problem of truth is regarded by the decent, tolerably God-fearing mind of man. But today a new kind of man has arisen, and has, here and there, attained absolute power. With this great idea of truth, which is related to all other great ideas, he perpetrates the most odious of falsehoods. He denies it, proclaims the lie as the sole begetter of life, the sole power directing history. He has made it his philosophy to recognize no distinction between truth and falsehood. He has set up in the world a shameful pragmatism which denies the spirit itself in the name of utility. Without scruple, he commits or approves crimes, provided they serve his advantage or what he calls his advantage. He has no dread of falsehood, but reckons falsehood as high as truth, provided only that it is useful in his sense of the word.

We can hardly wonder—indeed, it lies in the very nature of things—that it should be just this kind of man who has taken it upon himself today to overthrow Christianity. No man is less qualified to do so, whether the spiritual progress of humanity requires it or not. Christianity is not to be overthrown by a reversion to a lower moral level than that from which it raised mankind; at most it might be outdone. But the insolent propagandists of its decline do not seem to me to be going that way. Today a few revolutionary writers of popular literature, stimulated by half-knowledge, imagine that they have finished with it. A most untimely presumption, for, even though Christianity has at all times been too lofty and too pure a challenge to man's spirit to be realizable on earth otherwise than as a corrective to life, a standard and a spur to the conscience, as a moral discipline it was never more necessary to any time than to ours. And there are no more repulsive examples of the confusion and barbarization of our world than those who claim to overthrow Christianity.

It is no longer permissible to draw comparisons between the personal, inner world, and the social, outer world. We can no longer contrast metaphysics and socialism, regarding the latter as irreligious, unholy, materialistic, a mere seeking for a felicity of the antheap. Even in a world so contrary to God, so bereft of all reason as ours is today, we may no longer oppose the metaphysical, inward, religious world to the desire for better things or regard it as the superior or even sole worthy one. Political and social man is part of man. Humanity stands astride two worlds, the inward and the outward, and there are good reasons for it, if it is above all the creative artist who refuses to be discouraged in his struggle to humanize and spiritualize the outer world by the jibe that such interests are inferior and merely materialistic.

Materialism—a childish bugbear of a word—and false into the bargain. It is a false idealism to disregard what is humanly decent in the name of the inner world. Materialism can be much more spiritual, much more idealistic and much more religious than any attitude of sentimental pride toward the material. For materialism means in no way to be lost, to be dissolved in the material. It means the resolve to penetrate it with the human mind. And the resolve, which is incumbent on us all, is not to hide our heads in the sand of metaphysical things from the urgent demands of the material, of social and collective life, but to join those who have resolved to give earth a sense—a human sense.

Taxes On Racing.

THE RAW, LARCENOUS gall of State Legislatures in perpetrating political swindles sometimes covers up such jobs with an appearance of unreality. People find it impossible to believe that such things can be and let the robbery go unchallenged merely because it is incredibly bad.

A case in point is the current frantic search for some means of raising $20,000,000 in New York State. The Legislature turned down a proposed increase of 1 cent in the gasoline tax which was counted upon to provide the money, and various alternatives have been suggested, but nobody has insisted on a race track betting tax which would easily cover the lack.

Florida, with a gambling business which is only a fraction of the potential New York turnover, raised almost $2,000,000 in taxes on the pari-mutuel traffic this winter, much of this being New York money, and other States have profited in proportion.

Yet New York has horse racing, and the Legislature has now passed a law to legalize dog tracks, and the gambling rights have been turned over to a lot of bookmakers, who form a colony of the political and social underworld, as a political concession. It is a good deal as though the State were to parcel out fishing or mining rights in a State preserve to a group of private individuals, for the gambling concession is State property and could be worked with great profit.

* * * *

BUT THE STATE LEGISLATURE, though it legalized race track gambling after many years of nominal illegality, refused to do anything to legalize the pari-mutuel system, whereby the public treasury would collect a percentage of every dollar wagered through the machines. The bookmakers are organized, and they have political connections and power, and the situation is one in which the gambling industry calmly walks off with millions of dollars that ought to drop into the treasury.

Against the mutuel system it is argued that the wear and tear on a dollar soon consumes it all. If the tax and the breakage amount to, say, 10 per cent, the dollar is used up after ten transactions and must be replaced by a dollar of fresh money. This theory, however, has not diminished the traffic in Maryland, where the machines have operated for many years, or in Kentucky, Illinois, Florida or other States. The supply of fresh money seems inexhaustible, in addition to which it may be shown that the wear and tear on a dollar in the handbooks is at least as bad if not worse.

Bookmakers employ clerical staffs, and their costs of operation run so high that they are bound to take down at least as much as the State would collect in taxes before they can count on a profit. The proof is seen in the fact that the pari-mutuels consistently pay better odds in the mutuel States than the books pay in New York, the only State which preserves the archaic and parasitic bookie system.

I am unable to suggest any explanation of this hesitancy except the obvious interest of political organizations in a method which throws at least $20,000,000 a year of potential taxes into the hands of individuals who enjoy a special privilege under the law.

* * * *

YET IN RUNNING their hands over the citizens in search of concealed money, which might be lifted out of their pockets to meet the deficit, the statesmen have not even given serious thought to the adoption of the mutuel system, which would abolish the amazingly rich racket of a comparatively few individuals.

That privilege was established by law, a generous gift to a select class with notorious underworld connections, and it is protected by the Legislature even at a time when every other class of people, with the single exception of the tax-exempt public employes, must shower down to compensate the exemption of the gambling racket.

The gambling industry, though large, is a furtive and mysterious rogue in the life of the country, much given to bribery and corruption, but even the most conservative States, including New Hampshire, have thrown up their hands and legalized it in recent years in order to make the underworld pay its share of the cost of government.

Inasmuch as gambling is legal in New York it should be taxable, but for reasons which may only be surmised its tax immunity continues, and now a new phase of the vice has been granted a franchise to fleece the citizens through the erratic performances of the dog racket, which, like burglary and prostitution, thrives under cover of the night.

The Once Over

Review Of The Coronation Tryout.
(In the Manner of 'Variety.')

"Coronation," the big British de luxer, seen in its full-dress rehearsal, in the streets of London, seemed to need pepping and pruning, but shortages will be attended to and show should pack plenty socko both for class and peasant draw. Tryout lacked big personalities, both King George and the Queen being held in reserve for big punch.

* * * *

Production has more horses than the combined Barnum, Forepaugh and Ringling shows and is no weakling in display of gold and silver wagons. Tops is the royal coach, a swell hack if there ever was one. Looking like something from an early Cecil De Mille dream, with additions by Zanuck, it panicked the yokels although empty. What it will do to the mob in the grandstands when occupied is nobody's business. Gig was drawn by eight (8) horses that are better than rated. Not only good lookers, but have plenty of staying power as shown by smart condition at end of six-mile pitter-patter over London's 'ard 'ighways. Two lead ponies were lulus, packing genuine Hippodrome glamour as well as oodles of dog and pony show color. Other six beetles were a trifle green, but will click with further prepping. Harness and trappings oke.

* * * *

Military guard looked skeletonized, but will be built up into sure-fire appeal for the femme clientele. Horse Guards go to town in their end of biz and will be usual rave, but foot soldiers seemed to fall far short of top deck rating. Footwork was ragged.

* * * *

Entire performance was bogged down by usual London weather, which was strictly the headache for everybody concerned. Show also suffered from being poorly spotted between morning rush hour and forenoon shopping activities. Bright skies and plenty sun needed for this type of production at its best, but Lloyds will still give you 15 to 1 against anything but traditional umbrella and galoshes background on the day His Nibs and Lady are rocked all over town to make a Roman holiday for the bonnet and shawl trade.

* * * *

Twenty bands were spotted to help exploitation and did what the script called for. Hot music is crying need, however, and understand backers are howling for jazzing up of entire score. Music as now scheduled strictly patriotic flapdoodle.

* * * *

Full-dress rehearsal showed lack of timing and at times action stalled, but stage waits will no doubt be cut in next ten days. Big draw is certain, but staying powers are questioned. Combo of a real king and a genuine queen (in person) regarded here as sure-fire stuff with terrific pix possibilities, and smash biz all over world.

* * * *

Skepticism over appeal of principals fast disappearing. George is no Clark Gable and the wife no Miss Britannica, but pair will do in show of this type. Yanking of Eddie and Wally from cast was big upset to all concerned, but impression here is that new faces will help show. Production is by British Isles, Inc., but whole empire is reported cut in. Verdict on this one: Better than Paine's "Fall of Pompeii" or Bill Rose's last Hipp show, but not as big as Radio City's plans for next season. Only burden is terrific overhead and question whether American Ambassador will appear in knee pants. Production's one need is gags and a strip tease.

An Open Letter

Following are extracts from a communication addressed to President Roosevelt by Amos Pinchot, New York lawyer and publicist.

April 26, 1937.

The Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt,
President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. President:

I suppose that an effort to persuade a leader, in a position of great power, to reconsider his course is about as near to futility as anything a man in his senses will try. Nevertheless, the issues you have raised, especially since the November election, are so important and so very far-reaching as to warrant frank discussion by any citizen, whether he is in private or public life.

I need not argue that such discussion is a proper and indeed a necessary function of citizenship, in any country with a democratic government and a democratic tradition of life. For convenience and clarity, I am writing this open letter in the form of a series of brief notes.

The immediate occasion for writing, however, is to urge you, in all earnestness, to consider, and to reconsider, the connection between your judiciary bill of February 5, and your proposal to revive the NRA and impose on the life of this country a federally managed economy.

Mr. President, a managed or regimented economy such as you propose cannot exist, and does not exist, in any country where dictatorship has not been set up. It cannot live side by side with democracy. For it requires an amount of force and a degree of control over peoples' lives that is utterly impossible under democratic government.

What has happened in Europe makes it clear enough, that, if a leader pursues the path of bureaucratic regimentation of industry and agriculture, he must go forward into dictatorship, whether he wants to or not. And you, Mr. President, will either clothe yourself with a dictator's power, or you will abandon managed economy. No other courses are open to you.

In these days very few people believe in a laissez-faire policy. That policy has, to a large extent, been discarded. It is one thing to provide relief for helpless people. It is one thing to legislate against sweatshop conditions, to prevent child labor, to check monopoly and regulate transportation and utilities. But it is a very different thing to go on from that point to a government which decrees wages, which fixes the price of farm and factory products, which regulates the character and acreage of crops, and controls investment and the volume of production—in short, to a personal government that places the fate of labor, industry and agriculture in a bureaucracy controlled by one man.

This Mr. President cannot be done in a democracy and it should not be done. And what is more it cannot even be seriously attempted by any ruler until he has first captured the courts.

We are familiar with the kind of coercion Stalin has had to use in order to control the farms and industries of Russia. We have seen almost the same coercion used by Hitler and Mussolini. And it is significant that though Stalin in his new constitution grants to the Russian people an elected legislature he retains in Section 49 (b) of that document his grip on the courts. No matter where he may be the man who desires a dictator's power must first bring the courts to heel. For in no other way can he remove the barriers that stand between him and autocracy.

Mr. President, your proposed judiciary bill opens the path to autocracy in two ways. The first and most important is to revamp the Supreme Court. And, fortunately, this is receiving the attention it deserves. But the second way has been very little discussed. And, so far as I know, it was not brought to the attention of the Judiciary Committee until April 13, when Federal District Judge John C. Knox dwelt on it in his testimony. In fairness to yourself, it is impossible to believe that you fully realize the kind and degree of power which Section 2 (a) of your bill places in your hands.

As Judge Knox points out, this section means that the Government may arrange things so that only the new district and circuit court judges, whom you will appoint, will be transferred to other districts in order to try cases in which the Government may be especially interested.

Today, in order to effect such transfers, not only the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court must consent, but the senior judge of the district from which a judge is transferred and the senior judge of the district to which he is transferred. Thus, the three men must consent. And this arrangement is a needed check to the power of the Government to have a case adjudicated before its chosen judge. But, under your bill, the matter is one man's hands.

Consequently, if the office of the Chief Justice becomes vacant, and then is filled by you, your appointee will be able to block the transfer of any district or circuit court judge, and will be able to have one of your new judges assigned to a particular case.

Judge Knox, a most able and experienced jurist, who, by the way, has been a life-long Democrat and a good friend of your Administration, says that this section "exhibits a consistency of purpose that is of sinister aspect to every man who, on principle, is opposed to the use of stacked decks of cards." The sort of power that this bill would put in your hands is so alien to the American tradition of an impartial judiciary that it is hard for me to imagine that you either know or approve its purpose.

Obviously, it will destroy respect for the Federal courts. And it is in line with the corrupt administrations of the Stuart kings, who removed fair judges and put their own on the bench in order to serve their ends and buttress the power of the crown. Senator Borah points out, in a recent speech, that rather than go before such a tribunal Essex took his own life in the Tower of London.

Mr. President, your bill came from the White House. It came with a message signed by you, asking for its enactment on the plea that its object was to modernize the courts and promote efficiency. But, since that time, its real, and I think sinister, purposes have gradually come to light. We are loath to attribute these purposes to you. But who were the men who drafted the bill? And why have their names been kept secret?

The men who drafted the Declaration of Independence, which set our feet on the road to democracy, signed their names to it at considerable risk to themselves. Why should the names of men who have drawn a bill which, if passed, will turn this country back toward autocracy be so carefully hidden from Congress and the people? I repeat, Mr. President, that the country should be told who these men are.

The moment the court is packed and dominated by men who see eye to eye with you—that is, with men who believe that the Supreme Court should not override acts of Congress—from that moment any law which Congress may enact will be untouchable and sacrosanct, so far as the court is concerned.

Even if a law is drawn with the clear purpose of annulling the rights of free speech, press and asembly, or freedom of religious worship, it will be untouchable. Even if its aim is to abolish the present structure of democratic government, in part or in whole, it will be safe from review by the Supreme Court. And the only possible review or check will be your own veto, should you care to impose one.

Mr. President, I need not press the point, for it is plain enough to anyone who has read your bill in the light of your speech of March 9. But, let me say that, if your bill goes through, any law that may be enacted in periods of hysteria, as were the infamous reconstruction laws which harmed the Southern States almost as much as the Civil War itself, and any laws which may be written in the White House and rushed through Congress, in the name of emergency, or under the whip of patronage and Mr. Farley's threats of reprisal at the next election, will become, for better or for worse, the law of the land. And there will be no recourse.

That, as I see it, Mr. President, is what your bill means. And, if that is not a far step into dictatorship, I, for one, do not know what that word means. Certain opponents of your bill have, from time to time, been saying that they do not think you aspire to dictatorship. Others say that, while dictatorial power may be well used by yourself, other men may take advantage of the precedent you are seeking to establish, and may use this power as unwisely as have the dictators of Europe.

With this reasoning it is hard to agree. For, as I have watched your steady and unrelenting drive for more and more power, which has reached its climax in this attempt to control the Supreme Court, I am forced to conclude that, whatever your undisclosed purpose may be, you desire the power of a dictator without the liability of the name. And I am also convinced that, in a world in which so many nations have drifted into autocracy, with such spalling results to their peoples, it is the duty of the people of this Nation to resent and defeat every slightest move away from democracy and toward personal government.

Mr. President, I do not doubt that your ultimate aims are of a nature that you can justify in your own heart. But I cannot believe that you realize, to the full, the significance of the means you are taking to reach them. No illusion has brought to credulous peoples so much disappointment, and suffering and sorrow, as the illusion that a man clothed with great power will or can use it for the common good. And nothing is revealed more clearly by history than the fact that, with all its faults, democracy is the one hopeful form of government that has been devised by men.

Sincerely yours,
AMOS PINCHOT.

Chinese Taxes

By Norman D. Hanwell

Problem Of Local Government.

The following is an extract from a recent issue of Pacific Affairs:

CHEN HAN-SENG, the leading agrarian economist of China, has described the Chinese landlord as a "quadrilateral being," who is simultaneously a rent collector, merchant, usurer and administrative officer. The landlord class stands astride both the old social structure and economy of China, which it used to dominate under imperial rule by contributing to the mandarinate the majority of the old scholar-officials; and the new social and economic order of industrialization, modern banking methods and the modern military system, to which it has transferred a great part of its activity.

So intricate, indeed, is the social structure that even in provinces where the authority of Nanking can be asserted only uneasily or incompletely it is not in the least unusual to find that the families which are locally powerful and have a vested interest in evading the control of the central government are at the same time intimately bound up with families or individuals powerful at Nanking.

All the most conspicuous internal policies of the national government call for a vigorous extension of the central political control of Nanking and for modernizing activities which must to a large extent result in destroying old vested interests at the same time that they create new forms of wealth and the opportunity of establishing new vested interests. Yet the proponents of the new order and the defenders of the old order are members largely of the same social group.

* * * *

IT IS in the lower organs of government that the drive for centralized power in China tends to break down. National and even provincial regulations can only be enforced through the hsien or county governments and even smaller organs. Local officials collect taxes, dispense justice, build roads and are the key men in the militia and police. The county magistrate is appointed by the provincial government, which means that he has usually a personal relation to the man whose military power controls the province.

Directly under the county there comes the ch'u or district, of which there may be from three to ten or more in a county. The head of a district is usually appointed by the county magistrate, whose henchman, accordingly, he is likely to be. Regulations exist which ought to limit the cost of district administration, but it exceeds the proper amount, sometimes by several thousand per cent.

Below the district are smaller governing groups which are theoretically chosen by the peasants themselves. They fall generally within one or the other of two systems, that of the pao-chia and that of "village government." The pao-chia system, a very old one, has recently been revived by Gen. Chiang Kai-shek. The usual structure is that ten households, or hu, form a chia, the head of which is chosen by the heads of households. Every ten chia then form a pao, the head of which they elect. Heads of chia and pao must be local rich peasants or landlords, no outsiders being eligible. The pao, which is a self-contained pyramid of local responsibility, is at the orders of the district, which can through it hold any given household responsible for a breach of the peace. The system can also be used for collecting taxes.

* * * *

VILLAGE GOVERNMENT is vested primarily in a village headman and his assistants, who are chosen by the local gentry, and there are also heads of market towns and other local communities. Their work varies, but usually they are the leaders in whatever the villages may undertake.

In every county, district, pao, locality or village, there is to be found the ramifying influence of a class known as "the local gentry." Very difficult to define exactly, it is composed of those of relatively high economic position and education, who hold the power of initiative or obstruction in all local affairs, and can either assume responsibility themselves or delegate it to others.

In the attempt to hold on to control of local government, landlords also maintain armed forces of their own. Each activity of the landlord class first finances itself and then develops excessive exploitation, through rents, interest, retail profits and peculation in official funds, all of which fatten the landlord's income from office-holding. Most of the taxes, assessments and requisitions of the higher government organs must pass in the first instance through the hands of local officials. The methods of collection vary according to the province, but the local official always works into the process at one stage or another. Corruption begins even before a man takes office, which is one reason why even the smaller offices are dominated by landlords and relatively rich peasants.

* * * *

ASSESSMENTS, besides being excessive, are unequally applied. The petty official in charge of a district can assess himself and his friends lightly. The national government has tried to do away with the system of farming out taxes, but it still continues. The same rural officers who assess and collect taxes also administer the law, the district office being, in most provinces, concurrently the local legal organ.

The centralizing political power of the national government is associated with the introduction of a new economic system, new methods of communication and a new military, social and political structure, which destroys the old vested interests at the same time that it creates new ones. Both the old structure and the new are permeated by the power of a single class, the landlords.

In the new, centralized structure there survives a position of special privilege and power for the more fortunate members of the very class which dominated the old structure. With his feet planted firmly in the old system, the "quadrilateral" landlord is able to reach out with both hands to take control of the new system and is likely to prove capable of continuing all four of his old activities, perhaps even more vigorously than before. This is the true heart of the problem of local government in China.

Not Dafoe But Defoe

By William Lyon Phelps

Author Of 'Robinson Crusoe.'

If you speak the word Defoe today, the majority of your listeners would believe you were talking about the doctor who had charge of the quintuplets—incidentally, remember the word Quintuplets is correctly accented on the first syllable and not on the second, as is also true of Quadruplets.

But the Defoe I have in mind is Daniel Defoe, who died on this day, the twenty-sixth of April, 1731. He was the author of "Robinson Crusoe," his first novel, which he wrote at the age of 58, and which he followed up with many others.

* * * *

"Robinson Crusoe" was published on April 25, 1719, and instantly became a best seller, the fourth edition appearing in August. Have you read it recently?

Have you read Crusoe?
I ask you to do so!

I read it through again recently for the first time in many years and enjoyed it more than ever. And now the Oxford University Press, New York, has just issued a new, cheap and complete edition. Remember that most persons have read only the edition prepared for children.

* * * *

The life of Defoe is as exciting as some of his novels. He was repeatedly imprisoned and was placed in the pillory for defending freedom of speech. It is pleasant to remember that the public shame of the pillory was turned by the people into a triumph; for they surrounded the pillory so that no man could get near enough to throw missiles at him, and they themselves, with cheers and laughter, pelted him with flowers.

Those who think gangsters are confined to modern American cities should read the book he wrote on his deathbed. Scotland Yard and the American metropolitan police would no doubt wish today to find such a scheme. The title of the book, published in London in 1721, is "Effectual Scheme for the Immediate Preventing of Street Robberies."

The Public On Court Proposal

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Most of us believe in the objectives of the New Deal, but not that they should be attained at any cost. It is commendable to observe an idealistic end, but it is sheer folly to lose sight of the practical means to that end. In spite of these good objectives, I am sure that the American people gave Mr. Roosevelt and the Congress no such mandate to change the American system of government, as the plan most certainly would do.

Stripped of all of its camouflage, the plan is nothing but a short-cut to amend the Constitution without referring it to a vote of the people. Of course it is technically within the law to enlarge the court, but the obvious purpose of such a plan is outside the spirit of the Constitution and thoroughly un-American, because it is simply a usurpation of the right of the people to amend their Constitution, as they have always been privileged to do when acts of the Congress have been invalidated by the Supreme Court.

There are two ways by which we can change the Constitution; one method is by a vote of the people themselves, the other is by way of judicial interpretation. The first named is the way the people have heretofore overridden the Supreme Court interpretations and made the change, as is exemplified by the amendment section to the Constitution. This is express amendment. The second named is to allow the justices of the court to make the change by writing their own opinions as to what the Constitution means on a particular point in issue, as is exemplified by the hundreds of conflicting precedents which have been handed down by that body since its inception. The President's plan comes under this second method. This abominable power of the Supreme Court to amend the Constitution has been exercised by it for generations. Instead of detracting from this power the President's plan would add to it, by approval of this method of amendment for the President's immediate objectives. Now who knows better what the Nation wants in the way of a constitution, 15 justices on the Supreme Court, or the people themselves?

The obvious difficulty with changing the Constitution by judicial interpretation is that it only sets up court precedents which are often conflicting. This method does not prevent the whole New Deal program from being undone by some future reactionary or even unscrupulous party in power, which may decide to appoint new justices to the court in order to reverse these New Deal precedents and set up other precedents of its own. Could anything but hopeless confusion result from such a process of amendment? The founding fathers knew what they were doing when they provided for express amendment, as against implied amendment. That is one of the rights guaranteed to the people in order to prevent any tampering with the Constitution by judicial interpretation. The exercise of this right clarifies questions of constitutional doubt where judicial precedents can not.

Of course, we cannot have a formal amendment every time such a question arises, but when a particular point has been juggled and tossed about by varying court precedents for decades, it is time to write it into the Constitution in express language by the formal amendment process, and not by adding six new justices to the Supreme Court for the avowed purpose of obtaining new precedents. I believe that I am as much in favor of the New Deal objectives as the President himself, but I am sure the only way firmly to establish those objectives in American life is by the regular amendment section of the document itself.

Another objection to having a Supreme Court which interprets the law as the exigency of the situation demands is that it would only add to the confusion, for the document was not written with the expectation that it could cover every situation which might arise in the future, and to interpret it in such a manner, without formal and express amendment, is to make the Constitution and all of its clauses look ridiculous and without the semblance of law and authority. The plan may infuse "new blood" into the court, but it will pour thin water into the Constitution.

This ill-contrived plan would establish unauthorized and unprecedented power in the Federal Government to amend the Constitution, leaving nothing to the people and to the States. It is a good device to destroy the Constitution itself for once the people's right of amendment is taken in the name of expediency, it will be taken again and again under the same pretense. Without that right the Constitution cannot long endure. This is what George Washington meant when he wrote in his famous Farewell Address, "* * * but let there be no change by usurpation for it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed."

Hindering Progress.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The highest authority, Chief Justice Hughes, said: "The Constitution is what the judges say it is." History shows that court decisions of one generation are often different from those of another generation. Any law, that is made by Congress, may be killed by the votes of as many as five of the nine Supreme Court justices. At present there are five justices who are past the age of 75; there are six who are past the age of 70; there is one who is past the age of 80. Today progress is being hindered by court decisions that belong to a generation that has passed.

According to the law of nature, the Bible and the result of experience, one who is past the age of 70 is, more or less, senile. There may be exceptions, but good laws must fit general situations. Experience has shown that, mentally and physically, no one is at his best when he has lived his alloted "three score and ten." There should, therefore, be either an age limit or a limited term for those who do not come up for reappointment or re-election.

Knowing this to be true, why can't the Supreme Court justices who have reached the age of 75, or even 70, retire? This is what they will eventually have to do or have an assistant justice, for abuse the President as much as you will, he is only the voice of the people who clearly showed their approval of his policies by re-electing him with the overwhelming and unprecedented landslide of 533 to 8 electorial votes. Sooner or later the people, who are the ones who count, will make themselves heard.

It is amusing to hear the President's opponents speak of his desire to pack the court, when everyone knows the court has been packed by Republicans for the last 50 years. It was packed against the President during his entire first term. When he succeeds in his court reorganiaztion plans—and he will succeed—he will only unpack that which has been packed for a half century.

Excerpts

It is clear that had the Supreme Court held to liberal and sensible interpretation of the laws and the Constitution when it had the NRA under consideration it would have clearly held it constitutional, saved the Nation millions upon millions of dollars and tragic confusion and greatly advanced the welfare of the people. Such are the conditions and contradictions which have obstructed the Nation's progress so ardently desired by Mr. Roosevelt. That he is seeking to correct them is greatly to his credit and vital to the economic and social structure of our Government.—B. A. BANKS, Norfolk, Va.

The fear that the action desired by the President about the courts may lead future reactionary Presidents to do likewise is groundless. They will do it anyway. The plutocrats are always ready to stretch the law for their usurpations. The assumption of the Supreme Court to supervise Congress is itself an instance of this. And who is to supervise the court? If Congress does as now proposed, that is only proper balancing.—WILLIAM C. LEE, Washington.

The President will have made himself master of the Congress and of the courts, which were established in the Constitution of the United States as equal, co-ordinate branches of our Federal Government. Constitutional government, which for nearly 150 years has safeguarded the rights and liberties of the people and the internal sovereignty of the 48 States, will have been discarded. A one-man government will have been established. —FRANK PUTNAM, Houston, Tex.

The prestige and traditions of our Supreme Court are too high and fine to justify any fear that either now or later any justice will hang on to his seat when he knows he's no longer, or suspects he may soon not be, in fit fettle. Justice Holmes set the pace that will be followed.—WILLIAM S. HAYES, Troy, N. Y.

Comment From District And Nation Still Pour In.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

When is a liberal a conservative?

I am greatly opposed to Mr. Roosevelt's attempt to pack the courts; but what else can we do?

At the time of the foundation of the Republic all men worshiped individual liberty and, perhaps, excessively. Many State constitutions have indelibly written in them specific items wherein the rights of the individual are written into the basic law. Gradually these have been "decisioned" out. As an example, not a few State constitutions have the clause "the right of the individual to bear arms shall never be abridged." The theory behind these decisions has been that we have ample police protection and court protection; but the theory is not based upon fact.

And now the "liberal judges" declare that the makers of the Constitution had more respect for a $20 contract than they had for the right of jury trial, in cases involving punishment up to 90 days. But, I believe State courts are nearer the people and the proper construction of the Constitution than are the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States. The most democratic of the Colonies, and of the States, was and is North Carolina. There, magistrates have jurisdiction only for 30-day sentences, and even in such cases, except mere breaches of town ordinances, jury trials may be had even for offenses involving only a 30-day term.

No one should have the right to deny right of trial by jury for any offense, though the right to waive should exist, and human rights should expand and not be contracted or denied because of "necessity to finish the business of the court," or to clear our city streets of men and women suffering the results of barriers to commerce which ended in the debacle of 1929.

When is the liberal a conservative; when is a conservative a liberal?

GEORGE W. JONES.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

On March 29 Senator Glass delivered a philippic denunciation of the pending executive move to scrap the Federal Constitution, which, under different circumstances, might well rank with the great historic speeches of the United States Senate. But Senator Glass knew perfectly well, no man better, the trend, aims, and objectives of New Dealism before the election of 1936, and roundly denounced them. Yet he is reputed to have supported Mr. Roosevelt for the nomination, and voted for him. This, if true, gives the Senator's speech rather the color of histrionics, than force and grace.

Senator Robinson followed the next day with a reply of such transparent sophistry, that it is only necessary to ask one question to explode his entire argument; that is, will the Administration be willing to select the proposed six new judges of the Supreme Court by lot, from a list of 98 eligibles, each recommended by a United States Senator? If not, why not?

However that may be, it seems to me that neither Senator Glass, nor any of the numerous contemporary writers on the subject, have pointed out the real danger line, or the function of the concurrent epidemic of "sit-down" anarchy, in the program. It ought to be obvious that little will be gained toward autocratic government, by nullifying the Federal Constitution, so long as State sovereignty stands intact. It is a far more insuperable obstacle than the Federal Constitution. It is logical, therefore, to assume that this will be the next line of attack, with the otherwise unaccountable "sit-down" tactics as the opening wedge. Right there lies the crisis, and it does not require any remarkable perspicacity to forcast results.

I note that Mr. Frank Kent thinks the next attack will be on the freedom of the press, but that is not the logical sequence. An attack on the press would cause an immediate furore of opposition, of little use, until the more formidable obstacle of State sovereignty is out of the way.

Whether an era of autocracy is the necessary or best means to clean out the Augean Stables of decades of rotten politics, is not here under consideration. Much can be said both ways. This discussion is purely academic.

Expensive Justice.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I have very carefully read every letter in The Post, relating to President Roosevelt's court proposal, all the speeches by members of Congress, the President and Administration officials. They are all only expressions of erroneous ideas, misleading statements, that would give us no relief from the injustices we are suffering.

Let us have some real facts. It is not more men, nor young blood that we need in our courts. What we need is a real Department of Justice. We must not expect justice to flow from a meaningless "judiciary department" as created by the Constitution, which sets up a judiciary and prescribes the cases over which it shall have jurisdiction but is silent on the main purpose for which it was created or accepted by the people.

We must revise our Constitution and reform our whole judicial system. We must change it to read "The administration of justice shall be vested in a Supreme Court," thereby stating in unmistakable term, the purpose, for which this most important branch of our Government was created. We must make this branch independent of all political influences so it will be in the service of the people and not of politicians. We must create a judicial system, that is as efficient in protecting us against foreign enemies.

Let us not be confused by this so-called "Department of Justice." That's a joke. Its real term should be "Department to Enforce All Statutes," for that is its function and not to administer justice. All proposals now before Congress will not give us courts of justice, nor justice for the people. For justice, which ought to be had for the asking, will still be too expensive for the average citizen, as it will—as in the past—depend upon the tricks the attorneys are able to play.

BENNO M. SEIBOLD.
Lanham, Md.

One Justice.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The conceded intention is to reform the court so as to cause it to act, not independently, but in co-operation with the legislative and executive branches of the Government. The attempt is made to support that intention by referring to the division among the members of the court and the numerous instances in which the preponderance of the prevailing opinion rests on the opinion of but one justice.

How is this situation to be cured by increasing the number of justices, unless it is intended to employ such arbitrary measures in the selection of additional justices that they will be committed to responding to legislative instruction at all times. Is the Administration prepared to extend its admissions to embrace such a sweeping attack on the independence of the judiciary?

The way to cure the supposed evil of nearly balanced opinions of the Supreme Court justices is not by increasing the number of justices, but by diminishing them till the court is composed of only one justice. Then there will be no divided opinions.

Mrs. Simpson's Girlhood Home Becomes Shrine

By Eugene Warner.

Baltimore, Md., April 25.—Wally Simpson found herself perpetuated in the manner of Lincoln, Grant, Jefferson, Washington, and other great Americans today, when her Baltimore home, where she lived for six years, was dedicated as a shrine to her and American enterprise, with admissions 50 cents a head.

In a tours chateau the sleek Baltimore belle, who toppled—as the phrase goes—an empire, and who is dreaming for the third time of Lohengrin, with Edward, Duke of Windsor, as her new husband, would scarcely recognize the modest brown-stone rooming house, hard by the railroad station, which today took on immortality.

Hallowed though the spot may be, it was, nevertheless, not without its touch of sordid commercialism at a "special" press preview. Strangers with the price of admission were not refused at the door by David Hubbard, colored butler, who, with a fine dignity, said:

"I like my job fine. I have the opportunity of meeting so many interesting newspapermen."

Wally's third-floor room, where as a girl at the romantic age of 16 she looked out over the rooftops of Biddle street, dreaming perhaps of the day when she and the one-time King of England would pledge the English matrimonial vows, was regarded by lady visitors today with reverence.

Bedroom Restored.

The bedrom, "restored," as the hostess insisted, "not reproduced," a nice distinction, with a lovely nook under the gable, decorated in white, with a pastel ivory rag rug, a massive golden oak bed a sepia picture of Wally as a babe clutching a big toe, and a very recent oil portrait of the world's most famous woman, which shows her as slightly club-footed, which she certainly is not, as any of her old dancing beaux here will tell you.

Quite charming is the home, which has been villainously portrayed by a fiction-mad press as a "cheap rooming house." (At least, it's nice the way it's been restored.) Mauve wallpaper in the "personal" sitting room, where, according to whispered advice from hostesses, Wally entertained her admirers, is most decorous, if a bit Victorian.

This whispered advice was somewhat confusing, however, inasmuch as Wally was only 10 when she first moved into the house and 16 when she moved out.

At the front entrance is a shield representing the royal coat of arms. The motto, as everyone knows, is "Honi Soit Qui Male Pense," and that, perhaps, should be the attitude of the visitor. In the dining room, for instance, it would be ignoble to snicker at the silvery mural ocsupying a whole wall showing Edward as a Roman senator with toga, sandals and no eye circles, and Wally, the two of them holding up the star-peppered heavens, while the globe spins below, all illuminated by concealed lights.

Castle Is Shown.

It would be vulgar too, to smile at the reproduction in miniature of Belvedere Castle in mother's boudoir. It's a very lovely reproduction, with green sponge trees, toy cannon at the ramparts, and best of all, an arrangement which permits switching off the electricity to show "Belvedere Castle by moonlight." The moonlight effect may not be much more convincing than the Elite Laundry dry cleaning sign next door, but at least it's a genuine attempt to create a spirit of romance, which, heaven knows, there is little enough of in this world. Did some one say "Ho Hum?"

The kitchen is done in gray and blue and truly could be a place where a charming young Baltimore miss might learn the culinary tricks with which to intrigue the jaded men of Europe. There's a sign at the door which says, such is the fact, and believe it we will, by the shades of Nell Gwyn.

Ah, yes, the diningroom stove; this indeed is the big surprise of the matinee. Mrs. Mathilda Mathews, hostess of this chamber, leads one toward it through the mauve "personal" sitting room, her forefinger held high as in warning.

"That stove," Mrs. Mathews exclaims, "it was here when Mrs. Simpson lived here. Just as it is. Of course we found it covered with smoke and smudge. But when we cleaned it off, goodness, what do you think we found? You can't imagine; not really, you can't. it's a "Windsor" stove, isn't that coincidence? A Windsor stove. My——"

Mrs. Matthews was quite overwhelmed by it although she has told the story time and again. It was too extraordinary. She called upon a slim young lady named Miss Carter, who wore a new straw with red cherries, and whom she introduced as "the curator," to continue the tour from there. Miss Carter takes everything in her stride. As a matter of fact, she is quitting tomorrow, she said.

Backers Unidentified.

But even Miss Carter wouldn't tell who is back of the museum. All she and Mrs. Matthews would say is, "it is owned by the 212 Biddle Corporation. Whoever the 212 Biddle Corporation may be they have spent a lot of money digging up gay nineties furniture, wallpaper, drapes, hostesses, butlers, leases and legends, and they will probably get it all back because the museum has the breath of living romance in it, and isn't all bogged down with ancient history. It's modern, it's colossal.

The bathroom is almost as medieval as those in the great manors of England, and incidentally the heating system is decidedly continental. In other words, there isn't any. A giant iron bathtub painted white, the only bath in the house, recalls the pioneer days of early Baltimore.

Final touch is a roomful of "shadow boxes" in which are wax images of the personnel of the English court. King George, Queen Mary, and Wally Simpson are grouped together, with Wally on bended knee. Edward at his desk, Edward in a guardsman's coat, and Wally, not at all seductive, with a very wooden back, complete the show.

Yale Scientists Alter Chlorine To Potassium

Academy Meeting Hears of Results of Atom Bombardment.

On the eve of the meeting of the National Academy of Science here Yale University last night announced that three of her scientists, alchemists of the twentieth century, have succeeded in transmuting chlorine into potassium and argon into calcium.

As the alchemists of old sought to change lead into gold, a Yale physicist and two graduate students, working with complicated modern scientific apparatus, experimented with changing the forms of elements.

The scientists, Dr. Ernest C. Pollard, and his assistants, Howard L. Schultz, of Cassadaga, N. Y., and D. Gordon Brubaker, of Nelson, Nebr., bombarded chlorine and argon with helium nuclei, which move with a speed one-tenth as fast as that of light and with an energy of 9,000,000 volts.

The announcement interested the several hundred outstanding men of science here for the traditional spring "science week," which opens with a meeting of the National Academy and continues with other societies reporting new advances in their research.

The National Academy will meet today and tomorrow in its headquarters at 2101 Constitution avenue northwest.

Thereafter there will be meetings of the American Geophysical Union, the American Meteorological Society, the Institute of Radio Engineers and the International Scientific Radio Union.

The American Physical Society will hold its spring meeting at the Bureau of Standards on Thursday and Friday.

Mrs. Walker Lectures To Aid Nurse Service

An April downpour didn't prevent several hundred persons from going to the Mayflower last evening to hear Mrs. Joseph G. Walker deliver an illustrated lecture on historic Virginia gardens. Proceeds went to benefit the Kentucky Frontier Nursing Service, founded 12 years ago by Mrs. Mary Breckinridge.

Mountaineers in Kentucky benefit from this service, which supplies doctors and nurses for the indigent sick. Young women from all over the country volunteer to act as couriers, which means caring for the horses used to ride over the rough trails and accompanying the nurses on their errands.

Last evening several Washington residents who at various times have been to the Kentucky mountains in this capacity ushered or took tickets at the lecture. Miss Marion Shouse gave a short talk before Mrs. Walker's address, explaining the purpose of the service. She wore a pale blue metal cloth gown with tiny sleeves.

Her sister, Miss Elizabeth Shouse, in black taffeta with roses at the waist, helped take tickets. Mrs. D. Lawrence Groner, their mother, and Judge Groner also were present.

Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, in black with a velvet scarf striped in several colors, arrived with Admiral and Mrs. Emory Land, the latter wearing a frock of green lace. Representative and Mrs. Richard Wigglesworth had with them the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Booth, of Louisville, Ky., who came up especially for the lecture. Mr. Booth is a member of the national executive committee of the Frontier Nursing Service.

Miss Marguerite Woolley, Miss Christine Ekengren, Miss Mary Cowles and Miss Josephine Rice, who have all worked with the service in Kentucky, helped to usher.

Mrs. Keith Merrill, who entertained at dinner previously, brought her guests. Her flowered spring print was topped by a black velvet jacket. Mrs. Louis Greene, with whom Mrs. Walker is staying in Washington, was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Anne Carter Greene, who wore a black tulle frock with a little jacket edged with pink velvet.

Others there were Mr. and Mrs. John W. Davidge, Mrs. Marshall Langhorne, Mrs. Gardner Boothe, of Alexandria; Miss Martha Talley, Mr. and Mrs. Wade Ellis, Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin, in a long black taffeta wrap, and Mrs. Harry Covington.

Mrs. Walker was formerly president of the Virginia Garden Club. She is the wife of the assistant headmaster of the Woodbury Forest School, Woodbury Forest, Va.

Fairfax, Mrs. John Wilber Jenkins, Miss Cara Hinman, of Atlanta, and Miss Elizabeth Marshall Mauney, of North Carolina, assisted in the dining room, where an informal buffet supper was served at the close of the program.

Mr. V. Divina, Czech composer and conductor, accompanied Miss Halama, and Mr. Sigmund Michota accompanied Mr. Bezzeg.

Mr. Jan Masaryk, son of the first President of the Czechoslovak Republic, was the first diplomat to become a patron of the National Opera of Washington. Mr. Ottakar Marak, noted Czech tenor, and his wife, Marie Cavan, were the first guest artists of the company. Last evening's program of Czechoslovakian music was arranged in appreciation of this early recognition and support.

Georgetown Matron Will Open Garden

MRS. F. LAMOT BELIN

photographed in the garden of her home, Evermay, which she is opening again this year for the Georgetown Garden Pilgrimage to be held Saturday from 1:30 to 6:30 for the benefit of the Georgetown Children's House. The pilgrimage has been sponsored for nine years for the benefit of Children's House, a day nursery for underprivileged children. The garden is famous for its azalea terraces and now has rare white wistaria in bloom against the rose brick walls of the house. A new border of English yew is being put in and will be completed by Saturday.

THE MERRY WHIRL

By Marylyn.

Navy parties are always such fun! It is rather like old home week, with everyone knowing every one else and finding friends not seen since duty together way off in Guam or what have you. The Preston Mercers entertained at a lively cocktail party in their Chevy Chase home the other afternoon. When we arrived we found Bob Campbell and Jack Bolton out on the front porch being most attentive to Betty Ann, young 12-year-old daughter of the household, who is as blonde as her petite mother and has the poise of a debutante.

The dining room was filled to overflowing, the snapdragon-decorated and plentifully-laden tea table well surrounded by guests, who after receiving their cups of tea or punch, retired, not to another room, but to the window sills, for a chat. Mrs. Paul Hord, wearing a spritely print and Mrs. Wallace Lind, in chic severe black, took their turns serving.

A rather remarkable thing happened—when one of the guests, costumed in scarlet, arrived. We thought, at the first glance, that it was little Mrs. Beverly Jones, of Fort Myer, and were wondering at the presence of the Army. There was a very striking resemblance and when we met the young person, we learned that there might well be a similarity in appearance, because she was Virginia Voeth, sister of our Mrs. J.

Some of those seen were Commodore and Mrs. John Walter McClaren, Lieut. and Mrs. Robert Martin, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Maurice Curts, and Dorritt Murphy and Leslie Tollaksen, whose wedding will take place May 29.

Saturday, dreary, chilly day that it was, was brightened considerably by Marjorie Jane Dampman, who was entertaining at a luncheon at the Shoreham. She had on a black frock splashed with large white flowers, a tricky white felt hat and white sandals. But then, she is just back from a Southern cruise and white accessories are natural to her.

It was like the fall with debutante festivities in full swing to see so many of the girls there. There were Eleanor Carroll, attractive Navy junior; Rosalie Bowie and her cousin, Sylvine Clagett; Mary Elizabeth Tilghman, in royal blue crepe with coat and hat of beige wool crepe; Alice Clarke, who inherits her father's artistic talent, as one can well see by her choice of clothes; Alice Richardson in a blue and yellow paisley frock; Fenella Castenado, who is as slim as a reed and was busy talking about the parties already scheduled for next winter—(think of that); Mary Katherine Bentley, Imogene Ficklen and her sister, Mrs. Frances Hill; Betty Marsh, the two Mattinglys, Betty and Eleanor; Josephine Rice, smartly costumed in black with silver fox collar; Charlotte Brown Plumley, Mildred Elliott, with a tricky hat of English tan baku topping off her tailored suit; Cecelia Talbott, in gray and blue, and Mrs. Charles Carroll—(Ruth Howe, that was).

* * * *

Out at the Shoreham just about everybody had turned out to see the ice-skater dancers. Near us sat Betty Galt, in cream satin, with Bob McCandlish; Christine Ekengren, in something simple and dark, and oh so smart, escorted by Napier Parlato; across the dane floor I saw Meg McMullen, in a black printed evening frock, with Rod Kenner and the Farley Smiths. At the very next table sat two attractive young married couples—the Clifford Wharton Phillipses, Natalie in flame with a wee jacket of white fox, and the Philip Huntington Clarkes, Suzanne in a light pastel printed gown. Natalie's aunt, Mrs. Campbell Pritchett, and Gene Vidal were spotted at the far end of the ballroom.

Saw Brig. Gen. John C. Beaumont—he of the snow-white hair and jet black brows—and his bride strolling through the lobby on their way in to dance. Mme. Pastoriza, wife of the Dominican Minister, wearing natural linen lace over black, with Mme. Eckert, Marguerita Montero and "Chan" Valverde stopped briefly to talk to the Jack Powells, Ruth in tangerine pineapple cloth, who were watching the dancers from the sidelines.

Legion to Hold 3d Horse Show

Mrs. J. H. Whitney and Mrs. J. C. Hamilton Are Invited to Judge.

The American Legion Charity Horse Show, which each year attracts many participants and spectators from the ranks of Capital society, will be held Sunday in Rock Creek Park, at Chevy Chase, Md.

Mrs. John Hay Whitney, of Upperville, Va., and Mrs. James C. Hamilton, of Warrenton, who judged the show in 1935, have been invited to officiate again. Dr. Robert Humphreys, of Middleburg, and Mr. Augustus Riggs, M. F. H. of the Howard County Hunt, will be invited to judge also.

The show is sponsored by the Montgomery County Council of American Legion Posts and proceeds from the event will be used to maintain the orthopedic clinic established by the council to help crippled children.

Mr. F. Larmour Oyster, well-known Chevy Chase sportsman, is chairman of the committee again after serving in that post since the show was inaugurated in 1935.

Assisting the chairman will be Mr. Andrew M. Newman, of Chevy Chase; Mr. Warner E. Pumphrey, of Rockville; Mr. Eugene J. C. Raney and Mr. Lawrence R. Smoot, of Kensington; Mr. William Phoebus, of Gaithersburg; Mr. J. W. Swaren, of Rockville; Mr. Ralph P. Counselman, of Norbeck; Mr. Francis Kirk, of Olney, and Mr. Jack Allen, of Washington.

Nursery School Benefit Planned

The Georgetown Garden Pilgrimage will have its first tour of 12 gardens on Saturday from 1:30 until 6:30 for the benefit of the Children's House on N street, a nursery school and settlement house for underprivileged children.

This year the committee, headed by Mrs. Robert F. Whitehead, has been enabled to purchase a permanent home for this Children's House. Through several generous gifts a house at 3224 N street has been bought and is to be reconditioned with the equipment necessary for small children.

A complete list of the gardens to be opened this coming Saturday are as follows: Mr. Robert Allen, 1525 Twenty-eighth street; Mr. F. The 1925 F Street Club, through the courtesy of its members, will be open to visitors throughout the afternoon, and tea will be served in the garden. This benefit is planned as a compliment to the Colonial Dames, in convention here that week.

Proceeds from all three benefits will be turned over to the fund now being raised by the united hospitals emergency campaign by the board of lady visitors of the Children's Hospital.

Recovered by 72c Post Lost and Found Ad
A lady from North Carolina visiting at the Mayflower Hotel lost a diamond and platinum wrist watch that is worth $1,500. She phoned her loss to the Lost and Found department of the hotel. Mr. J. Simpson, manager of the Mayflower's Lost and Found Department, immediately phoned an ad to The Post. The following morning a Post reader who had found the watch, saw this Post ad—

—and returned the watch to Mr. Simpson who turned it over to the lucky lady from North Carolina (lucky indeed that she told Mr. Simpson, who knows that when anything is lost, a Post Lost and Found Ad can bring it back, if recovery is at all possible).

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Girl Tells of Long Devotion to Youth Whose Kiss She Can't Tolerate; Is It Love, She Asks?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am sure you can help me with something I've been wondering about for a long time. I've been going with a boy for the past four years. At first we went steady, but for the last two years we have not. I have dates with him every week-end and we have grand times together. He is the most decent fellow I've ever known or ever hope to know. He has ambition, high morals, very good looks, and just about everything that goes to make a perfect person.

* * * *

We like to do things together such as horseback riding, swimming and the rest. We get along fine until he gets serious and wants to kiss me. He doesn't do it much now because he knows I don't like it. I don't think I love him and I really want to. That's what I'd like you to tell me—do I love him? To most people that probably sounds silly, but I think you will understand how I feel. (I'm 19 and he's a year older.)

* * * *

He says he loves me and does little things for me all the time. That makes me believe that he does. I think he is really too kind to me and I'm afraid I sometimes take advantage of his kindness. He gets angry when I tell him I've been out with someone else and yet he wants me to tell him. He is always sorry afterward and says he can't expect much else if I don't go steady with him. He doesn't go out with other girls very often. He really doesn't have time to, because he works so hard at college. When he does, I even feel a little jealous. I guess I'm just what you'd call selfish.

* * * *

All my girl friends think he's grand and he is, and they cannot understand why I'm not in love with him. It's not that I'm tired of him for I always look forward to seeing him, which is only on week-ends. I've thought myself in love a thousand times with other boys all during school, which I suppose is only natural, but I've always ended up with this boy when I realize how folish I had been. Don't get the idea that he just sat back and watched while I was going with someone else, for he didn't.

* * * *

I can always go to him with my troubles and he always helps me. I guess it's just that I don't appreciate how lucky I am. I know I am, but that doesn't help matters any. I'm going away soon for several months. Do you think that will help, or will he begin thinking how foolish he's been, wasting his time on someone who didn't seem to appreciate him? I've been away months at a time before and it didn't change matters any. Thanking you for any advice, and hoping this letter doesn't sound too queer, I am, sincerely, JANET.

Two Kinds of Love.

DEAR JANET: I believe you love the young man without being "in love" with him, if you know what I mean. You are greatly attached to him, you value him for his intrinsic worth and these sentiments amount to love on the mental and spiritual planes, but you are not "in love" with him in the sense of feeling a passionate physical response to or desire for him.

* * * *

The absence of physical responsiveness may mean one of two things: It may mean that certain aspects of your past moral and social training have conspired against a healthful development of the passional side of your nature, so that you will have real difficulty in achieving adult normalcy of feeling on this frankly human front of love. Or it may mean just the reverse, namely: That sane and wholesome rearing has invested you with an emotional and social balance remarkable for your years. A balance so perfect, in other words, that your very intuition is able to tell you that this man, despite his splendid qualities of character, his good looks, social eligibility and compatibility of temperament, is not the satisfactory lover for you.

* * * *

Your own intelligence must be trusted with deciding which analysis applies most accurately. You say you have fancied yourself "in love a thousand times with other boys all during school . . . but always ended up with this boy" when you "realized how foolish" you had been. That doesn't tell the nature of your attachment to other boys, nor why those relationships ended. But by reviewing them in memory, you should not be able to determine whether or not you shrink from all lovemaking. If so, you are still pretty much of a little girl, regardless of your age and social experience. If, however, you have at times been transiently "in love" with certain boys who nevertheless could not win or hold your respect, affection and trust as this boy holds it, we may reasonably conclude that you are a perfectly normal 19-year-old girl who simply has not yet met the man or boy she can really love.

* * * *

The jealousy you feel when this boy pays attention to other girls is probably only an ego twinge. Your pride is pricked at the thought that he may one day find some other girl who is more attractive to him than you. As things stand between you, it is very likely he will one day meet a girl so thoroughly congenial and attractive that he will decide he's "been wasting his time on (you) who didn't appreciate him." If and when that day comes, you will probably suffer considerably at the loss of his erstwhile patient devotion—but it will be your ego, rather than your heart, that is bruised. M. H.

Adult Can Make Child Happier By Small Gifts

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

WHEN POLLY was a little girl, she expected a surprise every time she looked into her doll's house, and generally her hopes were realized. It was never much—a bit of bright ribbon, a piece of 10-cent furniture which her mother had seen and purchased that morning, a pretty little box, or new clothes for every member of Polly's doll family.

As Polly grew older there was still the element of the unexpected to look forward to. There would be a pair of new silk stockings, a dainty little purse, a necklace of beads to match her dress. None of the articles cost much, but they expressed thought and imagination on the mother's part and gave an edge of interest to life.

Children are dependent on adults for all they have. Even if they receive allowances, they never seem to have money for the little luxuries of life. Grown-ups can, and as a rule do, satisfy an occasional whim for the unnecessary extras which add so much color to the daily round.

After one has been to a movie or two and satisfied a craving for ice-cream soda, the average allowance is pretty well used up, and one's interest in shop windows never gets beyond the stage of visual admiration.

Lace and Scarfs Make Evening Gowns Regal

EVENING gown and matching coat (below), of midnight blue lace, worn over white organza; designed by Patou. The white foundation shows to good advantage the unique pattern of the lace. Effective accents are the bandings and huge bow at waistline, of midnight blue velvet. At right, is a regal evening ensemble of cinema rose and lilac blue acetate rayon satin. The twin scarfs, flowing gracefully from the shoulders, and the horizontal panels of the skirt are new and interesting style features. Designed by Mlle. Marie.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, April 25.

NOT LONG AGO I attended a christening which established an all-time high for these interesting events in my experience. It was the babtism, according to the Lutheran rite, of the famous (I trust) Kasper Quads, of the thriving city of Passaic, N. J.

ALICE HUGHES.

The metropolitan area yields to none in this country in the matter of civic pride, and we are desperately interested in our quadruplets. Of course, they are one less than the divine Dionnes, but we boast that they are far funnier looking, and that there are three little boys to one little girl, and that all our sense of showmanship is called into play—something that our Canadian brothers lack in great measure.

So, St. John's Lutheran Church in Passaic was jammed, and 2,000 people could not get in when Frances, Frank, Felix and Ferdinand were duly sprinkled. Four nurses carried the kids up the aisle. Gov. Hoffman of New Jersey was godfather and his wife subbed as godmother for Mrs. Edmund B. Herrscher, of San Francisco, who is their benefactress to the tune of $100 a month.

The kids, on the whole, behaved very nicely. Felix, I regret to report, let up a slight howl when the water was applied, but the quartet were so amused by the four newsreel camera setups that they had little time to be temperamental. I am sorry to say that the congregation, thinking they were in a movie house, applauded as the children were toted up the aisle, but the officiating minister, the Rev. Mr. Lemke, quickly shushed them. All in all, it was a delightful baptism, and I left the sacred edifice convinced that Canada may have its quints—we have our quads. They will be one 1 May 9.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Roaming Forty-second street, the shopping hub of my small world, I saw the usual knot of staring people. But the citizens were not gaping at a man selling patent needle-threaders or radio gadgets. They were, on the other hand, peering intently at the small figure of the world-renowed Prof. Albert Einstein, who was sitting in a car at the curb. Hatless, his famous hair was flying in all directions, and he didn't seem to mind the stares much . . .

* * * *

Well, we have another nice little musical show in "Babes In Arms," which has some of Dick Rodgers' prettiest tunes and the cute person of Mitzi Green, who only a few years back was that funny, awful little girl in the movies. Mitzie, on the basis of the promise shown in the new show, will be very famous some day . . .

Horse racing is off to a tremendous start at our local tracks, but will really go social when the spring meet starts at Belmont, which makes the other courses here look like poor relations! . . .

Hope Williams, who showed so much promise in "Holiday" years ago and never again touched that high during her brief starring career, is back from her Western dude ranch, and tells me that she is going to have another shot at the theater, which is good news. For that Hope can certainly act a few when she gets a chance! . . .

* * * *

Macmillan tells me that German and Swedish editions of "Gone With the Wind" will appear in the fall, thus further packing the coffers of the author. Wonder if Tallulah Bankhead really is going to play Scarlett?

* * * *

As the tea and cakes went round in true British style, I sat in the British Empire Building in Rockefeller Center the other afternoon and beheld the beauteous Countess of Warwick wearing a gown once worn by the late Queen Alexandra, spouse of Edward VII. It was all part of a show whipped up by the local British Chamber of Commerce to get us benighted folk in a nervous coronation mood. Strangely enough, I remained quite calm through it all, and didn't even drop a spoon. I must really be working up a good state of poise these days!

Conquering Nervousness

MISERABLE ALICE! She could be glowing, vivacious, admired—if only she knew how to redirect the nerves that torture her now. Her outbursts are turning family and friends against her.

Yet like all neurotics she has a great advantage over more placid, insensitive people. The very nerves which seethe and boil over now can make her a really exceptional person, charming and useful. Neurotics who have poured their energies into the right channels have created the joys of civilization—progress in arts and sciences.

How do you change from a shattered, nervous person to an alert, interesting one?

First, by facing the truth about yourself. Recognizing that the worries, fears, resentments, discontent that weigh on you are largely of your own making. Real as they seem to you, they're no more pressing than other people's troubles.

Second, by turning those pent-up emotional energies into action—tap dancing, music lessons, club work, gardening.

Nervous troubles are not to be laughed off or disregarded. They're a growing problem in our civilization. They're responsible for more unnecessary misery today than any other single cause.

A well-known psychiatrist throws light on your nervous problems in our 40-page booklet, "How to Avoid and Overcome Nervous Troubles." Overcome worry, irritability, restlessness, vertigo, insomnia, quick fatigue and other nervous troubles.

Send 15 cents for our booklet, "How to Avoid and Overcome Nervous Troubles," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Formal Evening Gowns Marked By Regal Air and Sophistication

By Ethel Ehlen,
The Post Fashion Editor.

DRAMATIC color combinations are competing with styling in the current formal evening fashion picture from both the American and the Parisian point of view. With all this talk of youth and femininity, many of the latest creations show a decided tendency toward sophistication and a regal air—the last due to the coronation, of course. Gowns which are sleek and sophisticated feature black—but black with a splash of brilliant color, or merged with white in some striking manner. Those influenced by the feminine trend employ white, pastel tints and soft tones in their fashioning.

Scarfs—long, floating scarfs which extend from the shoulders to the hemline or beyond—are much in evidence in formal evening clothes. Sometimes these contrast with the gown in both color and material; others repeat the fabric and tones of the gown. The contrasting idea is more dramatic, especially when the long scarfs are of brilliant color, worn with a light or dark evening gown. These regal-looking scarfs are extremely versatile. They may serve as both wrap and gown trimming, or may also be worn extending from the waistline, forming loose panels for the gown—or a train.

Lace is the high light of the Paris evening collections; lace, in white or pastel tints, soft tones of bright colors, and black. Startling and new are the black lace gowns over white or brilliant-colored linings; the under-color often repeated in the belt, sash or banded trimming. For summer, Paris designers are showing black lace over white or tinted cottons, rather than silks or novelty fabrics. Lace is also being combined with cottons in horizontal bands, for both the bodice and the skirt.

Emulating the daytime vogue, evening gowns usually have an accompanying jacket or cape, of varying lengths; this is a practical idea, making the costume equally appropriate for formal evening or dinner. Most of the jackets match the gowns in color and material, in line with the ensemble trend. Regardless of the diverse influences, trends and vogues, there is a definite note of simplicity throughout the current evening mode. It is a studied and subtle simplicity of styling, which is synonymous with chic and sophisticated good taste.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

Change in Anemia.

What man in his primitive condition was like, what his diseases were, is a matter for pure speculation, and pure speculation only because civilization has modified mankind so much that even his diseases and disabilities are changed. Physicians cannot consider "natural" diseases when a patient presents himself for diagnosis, but the diseases that some of the products of modern culture have wrought.

A curious example of this is in the group of blood diseases called "the anemias." It is almost impossible any more to find a patient with one of the typical anemias, even to show a class of medical students. They have all been so modified by treatment or the good food which is so much more abundant than it used to be, that they present an entirely different aspect.

Liver Extract Used.

About 12 years ago liver extract was introduced for the treatment of primary anemia. It works so well that the disease has practically disappeared.

Not only that, but it has become a common remedy, and people take it for any run-down condition. Now, if the run-down condition happens to be primary anemia, and if the patient takes liver extract on his own initiative, he may take too small a dose, one just large enough to modify the blood so that the diagnosis is in doubt, but not large enough to cure the anemia. So, because he still feels not quite up to starch, he goes to a doctor and the doctor is up against it.

Doctors are, however, becoming aware of the situation, and have found means of making the diagnosis and of recognizing the modified form of primary anemia. There is no system or organ of the body that is so easy to examine thoroughly as the blood. We have very accurate tests for measuring the amount of the active chemical ingredient of the blood, the hemoglobin.

Blood Is Tested.

The number of cells, both white and red, in the blood are normally present in a certain concentration, and by delicate instruments and microscopic counting chambers, we can take a drop of blood from a pin prick in the finger and determine in five or ten minutes whether any given individual's blood is normal or not.

Then by smearing another drop of blood on a glass slide and staining it, the shape and size and character of the blood cells can be made out.

The Club Tea.

President—We will now hear the report of the committee on refreshments for the tea. Mrs. Squibb.

Mrs. Squibb—Madame President, the committee unanimously recommends cream cheese and deviled ham sandwiches and chocolate cookies.

Mrs. Close—Question of privilege, Madam President. Is it necessary to have both sandwiches and cookies?

Mrs. Bickel—May I inquire how many sandwiches and cokies it will take?

Mrs. Squibb—Well, there are 100 invitations, and we didn't figure any guest would surely eat more than two sandwiches and two cookies.

Mrs. Bigger—May I interrupt to say that I gave a tea last week for 75 guests and do you know how many sandwiches they consumed? Four hundred and thirty-three! And 321 cookies!

Mrs. Wright—A lot of people only go to teas for the food.

Miss Tootle—Well, just the same I think we ought to do this thing in a nice way. I suggest that we serve three sandwiches and one cookie.

Mrs. Bickel—It would be more economical to serve three cokies and one sandwich.

Mrs. Close—Well, I don't see why they need more than one sandwich and one cookie. After all they'll hear a nice musical program.

Mrs. Nitter—May I make a suggestion, Madam President? I think we ought to mix some chopped olives with the cheese. And maybe a little chives.

Mrs. Bickel—Water cress would be better. I always fix Mr. Bickel's cheese sandwiches that way.

Mrs. Lightcap—Oh, Madam President, I tell you what would be nice: To tint the cheese! I went to a tea last week—it was the one Mrs. Elmer Swank gave for her niece; you know she always gives such lovely teas—well, anyway, she had the cutest ribbon sandwiches. And I'll tell you what else she had——

Mrs. Flint—I rise to a point of order.

President—Please proceed with the report.

Mrs. Pry—Just a minute. May I inquire if the sandwiches are to be cut in triangles or squares?

Miss Tootle—Oh, Madame President, I think it would be terribly cute to have them cut in stars.

Mrs. Lightcap—Oh, but stars are out of date. I know at Mrs. Swank's tea——

President—Ladies! Ladies! Mrs. Squibb has the floor.

Mrs. Squibb — The committee recommends that we have 200 sandwiches and 200 cookies. That would be two apiece——

Mrs. Close—I am unalterably opposed to more than one sandwich for each person and—well, maybe two cookies.

Mrs. Smiley—It would look a lot nicer to have two sandwiches and one cookie. After all we can't afford to be little about these things.

Miss Tootle—That's what I say. I don't think it would hurt if we had three sandwiches and two cookies!

Mrs. Lightcap—Or even three sandwiches and three cookies!

Mrs. Close, Mrs. Bickel, Mrs. Biggar—Madam President!

President—Mrs. Squibb has the floor.

Mrs. Squibb—I move on behalf of the committee that we have 200 sandwiches and 200 cookies.

Mrs. Close—I am unalterably opposed——

Mrs. Smiley—Just wait a minute everybody. Now, we won't want to have any hard feelings about this matter. I propose a compromise. Why couldn't we have 150 sandwiches and 200 cookies. That would be a sandwich and a half apiece——

Mrs. Lightcap—But, Madam President, I don't see how we could do that. If one guest ate half a sandwich, who would eat the other half?

Mrs. Flint—Question! Question!

President—It has been moved that we have two sandwiches and two cookies. Is there a second?

Mrs. Bickel—Just a minute. I move to amend the motion to make it two sandwiches and one cookie.

Mrs. Close—I move to amend the amendment to make it one sandwich and two cookies.

President—All in favor of the amendment to the amendment to the motion——

Mrs. Lightcap—Just a minute, Madam President. How many sandwiches are we voting for?

Mrs. Smiley and Miss Tottle—For three sandwiches and one cookie.

Mrs. Close—No! for one sandwich and one cookie!

President—The secretary will please read the motion.

Mrs. Biggar—Just a minute, Madam President. I don't think we ought to take any hasty action on this matter. I think we ought to study in some more. You know how women's organizations are—always passing resolutions offhand and committing themselves on questions without going into them thoroughly. I move we table the motion for further investigation and have a special called meeting to act on it.

Chorus—Second the motion!

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

THE PRETTIEST GIRL we know paused in her powdering to remark to us, as we sat in her lovely pastel room, "I'd like to know why rich or important women are such frumps. Their houses are that way, too. What burns me up is thinking what I'd do if I had their chance and money. I'd have clothes and white rugs and all the trimmings! The funny part is that a girl can look very swell without spending a lot if she just takes pains. Yet the women who have everything we're hoping for will mash a felt hat on their heads and slide into a tweed coat without a second glance. And their houses get dowdier and dowdier the more chances they have to make them simply knockout."

Of course, these remarks are not 100 per cent correct. Some women of means make a whole career out of their clothes and houses. And some clever women have natural style about everything they wear. But it is a fact that women of achievement are inclined to neglect appearances, and we got to thinking about the women we know who could but don't have everything very just so.

The career women theoretically love to look stunning and have becoming backgrounds and they'll buy the best, but actually they are too busy and too engrossed in their work to bother much with the fixing needed for real smartness. It was brains more than beauty that won them their distinction and so instinctively they value their ideas more and give their best energies to polishing off their thinking. So we had to agree that most of them look pretty frumpy, especially the very successful ones (we're not talking about stage women. Appearance is part of their work).

The well-to-do women who neglect appearances are those who have everything and are too busy or too bored to give time to the looks of things.

And there are times when frayed edges have their own charm. Mothers of a batch of children all under ten don't usually have time for facials and pink nail polish. But they usually have handsome husbands who adore them. And houses bursting their buttons with children and dogs can't keep their creases in any too well. But who would trade the mellow tones of a room in that kind of house for the most interior decorated movie set on the screen.

But the real question is: Are you the type who got where you are on your looks? If so, you'd better make an effort to keep them up. If not, then go right on putting emphasis on your own best line. A lady can't be all things in one lifetime. But remember that whatever your talents, you'll be doubly effective if you're well groomed and have a house that lives up to you. For you have to be awfully smart or awfully rich to get away with dowdiness—otherwise you'll just be considered careless and plain, or else not be considered at all.

Short Evening Gowns Popular for Dancing

New York (AP).—Short evening dresses are increasing at New York's dine and dance spots, and they appear in all the summer style shows. Eight or ten inches from the floor is the smart new lenght for dinner dresses. For dancing, skirts may be ankle or calf length.

But long evening skirts still are more popular. The radio of long to short is about 10 to 1.

Civic Leaders Join in Salvation Army Group's Praise.

Civic leaders joined members of the Salvation Army yesterday in congratulating the Men's Social Service Institution, which works with the Salvation Army, on achieving its thirty-fourth anniversary.

Elwood Seal, corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, served as chairman and introduced a group of speakers, including George P. Mangan, president of the Kiwanis Club; James C. Dulin, treasurer of the American Security & Trust Co., and Isaac Gans, president of the Salvation Army advisory board.

The Washington Stax Band furnished music for the 3 p. m. exercises, and Adjt. Walter D. Needham played a solo on the euphonium.

Speakers recalled that the social service department had its beginnings in a book called "Darkest England and the Way Out," by Gen. William Booth, founder of the Salvation Army. Gen. Booth propounded the theory that unemployed and unemployable men could be rehabilitated through their own efforts without creating a burden on anyone, but rather using waste material.

The instiution enlists business and professional leaders in a cooperative service for the Salvation Army.

St. Paul's Fight Is Not Yet Won, Says Preacher

4 Ancient Mind Types Still Oppose Christianity, He Declares.

Christianity today finds opposition in the four types of mind, exemplified by the ancient cities of Jerusalem, Ephesus, Athens and Rome, declared the Rev. Ralph Marshall Davis, Erie, Pa., pastor, in a sermon yesterday in New York Avenue Presbyterian Church. And against these opposing forces modern Christians must wage the same battle that St. Paul in early times carried against those four cities.

Jerusalem, Dr. Davis said, was an "old town that made up its mind * * * and was determined to maintain its constant mood. Ephesus was devoted "to the expression of the basic instincts of man, to pathologic emotionalism." Athens boasted "irresponsible liberalness." And Rome, "the mother of coercion and the exponent of the big stick, refused every conciliation growing out of the Christian faith."

"Here are the four types of mind," declared the guest minister. "They are offered and do offer strenous resistance to Christ; the narrow-mindedness of Jerusalem, the loose-mindedness of Athens, the instinct-ridden-mindedness of Ephesus, and the brute-mindedness of Rome. Against these must work the leaven of the mind of Christ."

New Financing Rises in Week

New York, April 25 (AP).—Recovery in the bond market brought a revival in new financing the past week, resulting in the largest total of new offerings since early March, it was reported today.

A compilation today by Poor's Publishing Co. showed a weekly total of $123,107,495 in new issues contrasted with only $17,415,590 the preceding week and $48,708,500 in the comparable week last year.

Profits Tax Called Villainously Unsound

Chicago, April 25 (AP).—President Sewell L. Avery of Montgomery Ward & Co. told stockholders at their annual meeting today that the company was "in very great need of additional working capital."

"This lack of capital," Avery said, "is not surprising in the light of the undistributed profits tax which is villainously unsound. This tax will have to be changed, and I think it will be changed or this Nation will be changed—seriously." Because of the Federal tax on undistributed profits, Avery asserted, the company had paid out its 1936 net profits of $20,198,914 in the form of dividends.

Returns 'Home,' Shot.

Cleveland, April 25 (U.P.).—Arriving home late last night, Louis Chalto, 32, walked nonchalantly up the steps, produced the key to the front door, and proceeded to his bedroom, where he was met by a fusillade of bullets. At the hospital, the new occupant of the residence explained he had fired at a supposed burglar and Chalto recalled he recently had moved to a house several doors away.

Bob Burns Says

Copyright, 1937.

By Bob Burns.

Uncle Slug's mother-in-law came to spend the week-end with 'em one spring and late the following fall she said one day that she'll jest have to tear herself away.

Uncle Slug called a cab and helped her pack her luggage and they started for the depot. Uncle Slug noticed that the cab driver was a tough, hard-lookin', unsympathetic appearin' man and he was jest pokin' along, but when Uncle Slug tapped him on the sholder and said, "Would yo mind drivin' a little faster? I want my mother-in-law to catch that train!" the cab driver stepped on the gas and said, "Brother, I'll drive jest as though she was my own mother-in-law!"

The Federal Diary

Reg. U. S. Patent Office.

By Scott Hart.

Poor Lo's the Winner

There was a curious, but altogether happy, ending to that uproarious visit paid Washington last week by the six Sioux Indians from South Dakota . . . You may recall that the Indians—Joshua Spotted Owl, Eugene Little, Joe Thin Elk, Bull Man, Moses Slow Fly and Ben American Horse—became involved in a tempest after they monopolized the bathtub in the rooming house where Representative Francis Case, of South Dakota, had installed them . . .

The lady of the house, it is recalled, sent word to Case that something would have to be done and the something was for the Indians to move out . . . The Indians claimed they didn't want to leave Washington then, and the Representative was up a figurative tree . . . No one knew exactly what to do, but some suggested that the Indians be permitted to camp on the Mall . . .

It was known that the Representative was at the rooming house on that night, trying to get things straightened out . . . But it wasn't made known until yesterday what finally occurred. It seems that in the house was a book, "The Vanishing Americans," and this the Representative thumbed over while trying to solve a problem that wasn't vanishing at all . . . Finally he, or someone else, turned to a page that carried a picture of American Horse, and someone said that this American Horse was the father of the American Horse, who, probably at the moment was upstairs in the bathtub . . .

This became of interest around the house, and, coincidentally, the Indians by this time were all dolled up in their colorful and beady Indian suits . . . And then everybody talked the whole thing over, and before Representative Casey left the lady of the house had agreed not only to let the Indians remain for the night but reduced their rent.

A major decision—one of interest to Government employes—by the council will be the selection of "next steps" in the council's campaign to eliminate the patronage system . . . Brownlow will be heard on the opening day.

Site's Choice Held Subject To Congress

Law Drafted by Boylan Arms Commission With Full Power.

By Gerald G. Gross

"Would there be much of an outcry in Washington if we filled up the Tidal Basin?"

Chairman John J. Boylan of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission asked that question of Arno B. Cammerer, vice chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, on June 20, 1935.

"I hate to see a tree fall," replied Cammerer who, as director of the National Park Service, has thousands of them under his jurisdiction. "It takes 200 or 300 years to grow some of these trees and in some of my parks I have trees that are 4,000 years old.

"You will have an outcry against spoiling the Tidal Basin, but I think from the city planning standpoint, based on the plan of 1901, that you will be justified in doing it and I certainly would submit the plan of Washington to Congress and have the whole thing fought out in advance.

Must "Get Authority."

"We submit all our plans. The Lincoln Memorial plan came before Congress. You still have to get your authority from Congress for constructing the memorial."

This shows that, while Cammerer held the Tidal Basin site to be available, his position was that the Boylan commission should obtain the approval of Congress before deciding finally on the memorial's location.

Within a year the commission had obtained the authority mentioned by Cammerer, but the law, drafted by Boylan, gave it dictatorial powers and carried no provision that Congress must indorse its choice of site, design, architect or anything else. Furthermore, the commission was not required to submit its plans to the Park and Planning or Fine Arts Commissions.

With seven of the 12 members present, the commission met on February 18, 1936, to vote on the site. The first choice of four—Boylan, Dr. Kimball, Gibboney and Randolph—was the Tidal Basin. Senators McNary and Lonergan favored the Mall, Senator Thomas, the foot of East Capitol street.

Lincoln Park Mentioned.

None of the seven gave preference to Lincoln Park, though Senator Thomas marked it as his second choice and Gibboney, Randolph, Boylan and Lonergan placed it third.

John Russell Pope, whom the commission engaged as its architect shortly after its creation, prepared and submitted memorial plans for each of the four sites, but Boylan has never made public any but the classical Roman design which will fit the Tidal Basin, if the park lake is drastically altered.

Two weeks after the poll the commission was received at the White House by President Roosevelt, who "expressed gratification and pleasure with the work we had done up to date" after inspecting the various designs and sketches of Architect Pope. He also suggested that further studies be made of other memorial forms.

When Chairman Boylan called his fellow members together again, three weeks after the session with the President, the site was decided upon, though a final vote had not yet been taken, and discussion centered on costs.

No Public Hearings.

That was on March 4, 1936. Within the next three months Boylan had introduced his bill giving the commission unlimited powers on the entire project, and it had been passed by Congress and signed by the President without public hearings having been conducted.

The Seventy-fourth Congress came to an end and Chairman Boylan did not call his group together again until December, 1936.

It was at the conclusion of that meeting that the first official intimation was given of the commission's plans. Its chairman announced that majority sentiment was for a classical nonutilitarian memorial at the Tidal Basin.

Hightlights of the last two meetings prior to public announcement of the commission's decisions will be presented tomorrow.

Allies Blamed For Hitlerism By Dr. Bohn

'Clemenceau's Hate Started Nazi Madness,' Says Noted Publicist.

The rise of Hitlerism "and its menace to the world today" was laid at the door of the Versailles Treaty by Dr. Frank Bohn, authority on international relations, in an address before the National Temple Forum of the Washington Hebrew Congregation on Eighth street last night.

Dr. Bohn, who is the son-in-law of Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper, was he concluding speaker of the 1936-37 forum series. He expressed the belief that Hitler is "fundamentally insane," and said "Hitler came to the rescue of the German people when they were drowning, after no intelligent person appeared on the scene."

"If hatred had not overcome the heart of Clemenceau, we might not have had this present situation," Dr. Bohn said. "This poor, illiterate, vulgar peasant, Hitler, however, was on hand with promises when Germany, hounded by the allies after the war, had no salt to put on potatoes and often no potatoes."

Dr. Bohn said the Hitler majority in Germany was the result of fear, that most Germans opposed his philosophy of government, but that they had become so poverty-stricken after the war that even "madness" was acceptable. He compared the attitude of the allies toward Germany after the war with that of the North toward the South after the Civil War.

"Woodrow Wilson had the right idea, but he carried it unsupported to his grave," said Dr. Bohn, who also attributed the rise of Hitler to the fact that Germany had not had time to learn to rule herself as a republic before the depression came.

"Good sportsmanship is needed badly in Germany, just as it is needed in all our dealings, national and international," said Dr. Bohn.

Lorton Fugitive Just a Bully, Says Reformed Ex-Convict

Former Prisoner in Vivid Account of Life at Reformatory Declares Martin J. Walsh's Escape Is Surprise to His 'Bunch.'

Released from Lorton Reformatory two weeks ago, a young man who says he hopes to "go straight" has given The Post an interesting inside story of life in that District institution.

By Convict No. ——.

The fellows who lived in my dormitory at Lorton must be a surprised bunch as they read about "The Greek." We thought he was yellow. I still think so, and I guess the others do, too. But I see he has been making himself out a desperado in the last few days.

His name is Martin J. Walsh, and he is 36 years old. How a fellow with an Irish name got to be known as "The Greek," I don't know. He also was known as a member of the "Blackface Gang." He and the other members of his mob, as I understand it, used to blacken their faces when they went out to stick up a place.

Well, as I say, I was very much surprised when he and Walter Forbush, another member of the "Blackface Gang," escaped from Lorton the other day and began holding up liquor stores again.

"The Greek" is a heavy-set fellow with a loud mouth. He was always arguing at Lorton, and you could hear him all over our dormitory. However, whenever an argument reached the stage of blows, he always backed down.

Once a fellow caught him cheating at cards. He jumped up and hit "The Greek" so hard he knocked him out. We thought sure that when "The Greek" came to he would go into action. However, he didn't, and then everybody had his number. He got into a lot of other arguments, but in every case he would back down if the other fellow became serious. In the end, even the little fellows were picking on him, knowing he wouldn't fight back.

"The Greek" should never have been in our dormitory. For that matter, I don't suppose I ought to have been in there myself. I was convicted for blackmail. You see, there are a lot of young, first offenders in that dormitory—boys who have never done anything more than steal an automobile, and who burst out crying every time their mothers come down to call on them.

Those boys ought not to be in the same dormitory with old offenders. I don't say that for the reason you might think. It isn't always the murderer, the housebreaker or the crooked banker that is dangerous to these youngsters. It isn't always the really dangerous criminal; it is the underworld failure, the fellow who has been caught time after time on some small job, but who likes to romance about his criminal career.

This type seems to have a mania for telling kids what a big shot he was and how much easy dough he picked up until he was caught. Usually he is repeating something he has read in a crime magazine. But the kid prisoner, of course, doesn't know that, and he begins to get glamorous ideas about crime. I have seen any number of them leave Lorton, and then come back after trying to emulate these romantic flops who have been talking to them.

It isn't Col. Peak's or Capt. Barnard's fault that the young first offenders are herded in with hardened criminals. They try to separate them as much as they can, but they don't have enough space. I guess it is a matter of appropriations.

Another article by Convict No. —— will appear tomorrow.

Michaux Wars Against Divine; Bishop Denounces Them Both

Elder Solomon Lightfoot Michaux stepped up to a microphone yesterday morning and launched his promised "war" against Harlem's Father Divine.

"He's the devil, and I mean to give him hell," declared the elder over the air.

But he won't have the war all to himself. For in the city there appeared a colored bishop from New Orleans who recalled Michaux's lowly past, and charged him with grabbing the limelight.

The newcomer to the lists was the Rev. A. E. Braddock, a small man who, flashing his deep-set eyes, declared he would "drive Elder Michaux off the air."

Braddock made his announcement several hours after Michaux's radio talk—in fact, some time after the elder left to spend the day in Philadelphia.

As he had done in his declaration of war Saturday, so did the elder yesterday denounce Father Divine because he "breaks up the home and family, separates husband and wife, divests the communicants of all they possess of value, and makes them his angels."

"He is the devil incarnate. The spirit he has to exalt himself as God is the same spirit Lucifer had in heaven when Michael cast him out."

The Louisiana bishop's reply was a quiet statement: "First see the beam in your own eye, then cast the mote out of your brother's."

"My dear elder, I do not think you are so perfect yourself, frankly speaking," said Braddock, explaining that he would have nothing to do with either Michaux or Father Divine.

Addressing an open letter to Michaux, the Southern clergyman declared the elder must "surely have forgotten from whence you came."

Braddock said he could remember that only a few years back Michaux was a mere fisherman in Newport News, Va.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., April 25.—Mrs. William Jacobs, of Walsall, Cambria County, Pa., was rescued Saturday from drowning in Lake Gordon, Cumberland's water supply source, by three men who were able to revive her after taking her from the water in an unconscious condition.

Having accompanied her son, Frank, and several men, she was fishing on the bank of the dam when she slipped and plunged into the water. Her screams attracted the men who were about a quarter-mile away.

War of 1812 Daughters to Meet Tonight

45th Annual Council to Be Held at Willard for Three Days.

Delegates Are Arriving in Large Numbers for Sessions.

With the elections of new national officers one of the main items of interest on a long program, members of the Daughters of 1812, gathering at the Willard Hotel for the forty-fifth annual council of the society, continued to arrive yesterday and last night in record-breaking numbers.

Although formal sessions of the annual gathering will not begin until tonight, a majority of the delegates arrived in Washington in time to attend the memorial services for deceased members, which was held yesterday afternoon at St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, Eighteenth and Church streets northwest, with Mrs. Harper Donelson Sheppard, national chaplain of the society, in charge.

Yesterday a meeting of the National Officers Club, composed of past and present national officers, was held at the national headquarters building of the society, 1461 Rhode Island avenue northwest. A dinner for the members of the Association of State Presidents and Charter Members was held at the Willard. This was not open to general delegates, most of whom spent their free hours during the day and evening sightseeing or getting acquainted at the hotel.

Campaigning Proceeds.

Campaigning for favorites among those running for national offices has been quietly going on, and the air of expectancy and anticipation which marks the election-year convention makes it stand out in interest over the three preceding conferences. Formal announcement of the officers running for national offices probably will be made tomorrow, with the elections to be held Wednesday.

The formal opening of the convention tonight will be a colorful affair. A concert by the United States Marine Band Orchestra will precede the entrance of the national officers and charter trustees, who will be escorted by their pages. Mrs. John Francis Weinmann, national president, of Little Rock, Ark., will call the convention to order, and Mrs. Sheppard, the chaplain, will offer the invocation.

A recital of the American's Creed will be given by William Tyler Page, its author, and a welcome to delegates and guests will be given by Mrs. Robert J. Johnston, honorary national president. Greetings from the General Society, War of 1812, will be brought by George Holden, president of that organization, and the principal address of the evening will be given by H. L. Ponder, who will speak on "The Value of the War of 1812 to America." Another address tonight will be by Dr. Earl E. Harper, president of Simpson College, who will speak on "America Looks at Youth."

Will Present Flag."

A North Carolina State flag honoring the memory of Miss Jessica Randolph Smith will be presented to the society tonight at this opening session by Mrs. Sidney Perry Cooper, president of the North Carolina State Society.

Special musical selections will be given by Miss Dorothea Lawrence.

Business sessions will begin tomorrow morning, when reports from State and national officials will be heard, as well as the reports of the revisions and resolutions committees. The convention will continue through Wednesday.

Dust Hits Oklahoma.

Nicky Arundel, the 9-year-old editor of Nicky's News, who is crusading for giraffes in Washington's Zoo, won't be the only happy one if someday right soon there's a pair of the long-necked animals in residence here.

In fact, Ernest P. Walker, the Zoo's acting director, expressing full sympathy with Nicky's editorial campaign, would be no less than jubilant if a giraffe—even two or three—would suddenly apply for admission.

"Nicky's not the only one who wants giraffes," Walker declared last night, referring to the articles the young Wesley Heights editor has been printing in his own weekly paper. "Visitors out here are always asking us 'Now, where are the giraffes?' * * *

"And the only thing we can do is point to the big, new mammal house and explain that's where the giraffes would be if we had some. But we don't."

The only trouble now is raising money with which to buy them. There are giraffes in this country—but the zoos and circuses that have them don't want to give them up. And it would cost from $2,000 to $3,000 apiece to transport giraffes from Africa, their native continent, Walker said.

William H. Blackburn, head keeper at the Zoo, told yesterday about the great risk involved in shipping giraffes across the ocean.

"Why in rough weather they are almost sure to suffer—maybe with broken necks," he said.

The Zoo gets money fro both the District and Federal governments—but neither allows much for the purchase of new animals. Certainly there hasn't been $5,000 or $6,000 for giraffes.

But men out at the Zoo are hopeful. It's just possible that Dr. William M. Mann, Zoo director, on his way through Africa will find a couple, and will work out the means for acquiring them for Washington.

Sen. Capper Warns Against Spending

By the Associated Press.

In a radio broadcast to Kansas points, Senator Capper (Republican), Kansas, declared last night that the Federal Government must end "these extravagant expenditures in public funds."

He said he was in hearty accord with the President's "warning of the dangers of a continuing unbalanced budget." The Senator asserted Mr. Roosevelt in his recent relief message "faces as a fact, and deals with it as a reality, that the United States Government cannot continue indefinitely spending more than it takes in."

Capper added, however, that reductions "must not be made at the expense of agriculture," asserting that hope of sound prosperity "is based on adequate purchasing power for farmers, and that means agriculture must be placed and maintained on a paying basis."

D. C. French Church Holds Birthday Fete

Messages Are Brought From Other Cities; Growth Traced.

With an audience that included Mme. Bonnet, wife of the French Ambassador, and Mme. Peter, wife of the Swiss Minister, and with an array of distinguished visitors on the platform, the French Congregation of Washington celebrated its tenth anniversary in a meeting at the New York Avenue Presybterian Church yesterday afternoon.

Charles Lucet, secretary of the French Embassy, brought a message from Ambassador Bonnet, who was out of the city, in which he traced the part played by the French Huguenots in the founding of the United States and expressed the Ambassador's wishes for the success of the local French church.

A stirring message on behalf of the Protestant churches of France was voiced by Prof. Andre Philip, of the University of Lyons, who stressed the need for the solidarity of Christian churches throughout the world in serving humanity in this time of difficulty and distress and also in facing the new paganism that has recently arisen.

Dr. Marcel Brun, of Philadelphia, in bringing fraternal greetings from other French churches in the United States, mentioned especially the Huguenot church at Charleston, S. C., dating back to the sixteenth century; the Church of the Holy Spirit in New York, founded in 1628, and the French church in Philadelphia. Another visitor, Dr. Leon Wencelius, also of Philadelphia, read the Bible lesson and offered prayer.

Dr. Florian Vurpillot, founder of the local congregation, spoke of its development during the last ten years, in which it has not only ministered to the French but interested many Americans. The present pastor, the Rev. A. F. Liotard, concluded with a view of the future based on the heritage of the past.

An unusual musical feature was the rendition of sixteenth century hymns by a quartet composed of Mrs. Mildred S. Sherman, Mrs. Helen Ware, R. A. Hill and J. W. Haden, with Gerald M. Clemence at the organ.

The anniversary celebration will continue with an entertainment Wednesday evening in which the Foyer Francais will present a review of the provinces of France and the French-speaking cantons of Switzerland in costume and song.

Fred Stone Is Eager to Kill A Kadiak Bear

By the United Press.

Hollywood, April 25.—Broadway's too strenuous for Fred Stone, grand old man of musical comedy, but Alaska is not.

Rising 63, Stone admitted he's all through with the stage. All winter he has ailed with a pulmonary disorder induced by his air crash of a few years ago. On the advice of physicians Stone had his film contract revised so he'll only make three pictures a year.

"They tell me I got to take it easy," he explained, "and a stage show just takes too much out of a feller. I don't think I'll even visit New York any more. Hope, instead, I'm going up to Alaska to hunt them Kadiak bears. Always wanted to shoot one."

The gray-haired actor will go north to take America's toughest big game animal with his novelist brother-in-law, Rex Beach, late this spring.

Stone has been acting 51 years, beginning as a slack-wire acrobat with a wagon-train circus in 1886. His last Broadway appearance was in "The Jayhawkers" in 1934.

Among the Gals.

Shirley Temple's a big girl now. Eight years old and rid of most of her milk teeth. (She uses caps for picture work). The No. 1 box-office queen hosted a birthday party for 100-odd screen youngsters over the week-end. Meanwhile she's trying out a pie-making set presented by her parents in honor of her ambition to own a pie factory when she grows up.

Maureen O'Sullivan finally found a use for one of those "guides to homes of the movie stars" who set up shop along Sunset boulevard.

She was too busy to house-hunt when her lease expired, and Producer Jack Warner lent her his beach home.

On her way to the place for the first time she suddenly realized she had lost the address and was a bit panicky until she ran across a guide and evinced a burning desire to see the home of Jack Warner.

He must have been surprised when she paid him off at the gate and walked in.

Belasco.

That provocative young Czecho-Slovakian matron, Hedy Keisler, whose husband is popularly supposed to have resented her artistic urges before the motion pictures cameras, still is chasing her horse through some of the more daring scenes of "Ecstasy," which Sam Cummins is presenting for a second week of its return engagement on the screen of the Belasco Theater.

Miss Keisler evidently got the impression stuck somewhere in the back of her mind that she was Lady Godiva, although the figurative Peeping Tom of Coventry seems not to have displeased her.

The story of "Ecstasy" is about what you want to make it. It is, to begin with, a tragedy. Its sexual implications must be personally interpreted by the individual spectator. They are subtly and delicately handled, for the most part, and leave the onus of a bad impression strictly up to the patron who should know something about the meaning of "honi soit qui mal y pense."

The bill is completed by short-reel subjects that will not exert half the stimulus to the curiosity that will be aroused by "Ecstasy"—until you have seen it.

Rialto

Pursuant to its recent custom, the Rialto Theater this week is presenting another double-feature bill, consisting of William Powell and Ginger Rogers, in "The Star of Midnight," and Victor McLaglen and an all-mascline cost in "The Lost Patrol."

There is fine contrast to be observed in this choice of bookings. Mr. Powell and the husky Mr. McLaglen are nothing alike, and since Miss Rogers is the only feminine star of the bill, her contribution to it may be said to be unque.

"The Star of Midnight" is excellent diversion, in which, for one of the few times in her recent career, Miss Rogers appears apart from Fred Astaire — with whom she shortly will be seen again in RKO-Keith's.

"The Lost Patrol" is a grim sort of thing in which McLaglen, by some, may be thought to have betrayed something of the greatness that later was to be his in "The Informer." He is surrounded by a splendid cast of male actors, foremost among whom is Boris Karloff, as the demented member of the band holding a desert outpost against an unseen enemy.

One by one the members of the detachment of soldiers are sniped by the invisible Riffs and the thing gets considerably on the Karloff nerves—as well it might. He quotes scripture, poses as a saint and otherwise gives the picture an eerie quality it would not possess without him.

David Manley, singing with Pearl Hauer at the console of the Rialto organ, is scoring a sensational success at two evening performances. He does not appear in the mornings or afternoons.

The bill is completed by the usual short-reel subjects and news events.

Little

With Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur in the pivotal roles, that foremost of the light comedy productions of Frank Capra for Columbia Pictures, "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," is fulfilling its umpsteenth return engagement at the Little Theater this week. It is worth it.

As the young man who inherits a fortune of $20,000,000, when all he wants to do is to play tuba in the village band, Gary Cooper is at the top of his flight. Little less can be said of Miss Arthur, whose pungent style lends itself splendidly to this sort of thing.

While the major extent of "Mr. Deeds," quite obviously, is to be amusing, there is a basic foundation of sound sense in the picture that stamps it as one of the best of recent fabrication.

There are, of course, a large number of other important players in the cast, but these are the essential two.

The Presence on West Coast of Several Revelatory Artistes Strikes Slight Consternation to the Heart of Mr. Hays and His Associates; Woody Van Dyke Never Forgets—Forgets What? The Variety Club of Washington Steps Out With Youngsters; Those Previews Bob Up Again; Amusement Notes.

SEX, it seems, has raised its ugly head—if that is what you wish to call it—in Hollywood. While this has been going on for years, it appears, at the moment, to create a bit of consternation among the Will H. Hayses, the Joseph I. Breens, et al.

BELL.

The genesis of the present upheaval, if that is what it is, seems to lie in the presence on the West Coast of such widely exploited "display artistes" as Gypsy Rose Lee, late of the Ziegfeld "Follies," coming soon to the National Theater—whose real name, incidentally, is Rose Louise Hovick—June St. Clair, a member of the same general school of personal frankness as Miss Lee; Ada Leonard, another adept at disrobing, and Alma Bray, said to be equally skilled in the art of revelation.

Miss Lee is said to be on the Twentieth Century-Fox lot, Miss St. Clair in the offing at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Miss Leonard at RKO-Radio and Miss Bray at Paramount. All of these are personable and voluptuous young women whose indifference to the proprieties has brought them fame and, presumably, large sums of money.

Since the "strip-tease" artiste has come to be a fixture in certain precincts of the living theater, I am inclined to agree with the Messrs. Will H. Hays and Joseph I. Breen, administrator of the code authority on the West Coast, under Mr. Hays' direction, that their screen activities are not subjects of code authority until such time as they commit some definite offense against public morals or welfare.

It seems to me that this "strip-tease" business is being grossly overestimated as a threat against the public good, despite the contentions of my friend and confrere, Mr. Westbrook Pegler, The Post's admirable columnist, who perceives in it only the seeds of social decay and moral catastrophe.

If Mr. Pegler were a few years older, like his brother Jack, he would be able to hark back to the time when real "disrobing acts" had their place on the lower levels of the then contemporary stage.

These were exhibitions in which every article of apparel of a woman's complete wardrobe was removed during an interval that ran to as much as half an hour—hat, wrap, gloves, gown, shoes, stockings, stays, garters and what have you.

The present brief interval of revelatory charm is a mild thing in comparison. It takes no more than two or three minutes and leaves an impression of physical beauty, rather than salacity, in the majority of cases.

I will trail along with Mr. Hays and Mr. Breen, if I may, in the view that there is no genuine threat here to the integrity of the celluloids.

* * * *

As my friend Ed Sullivan is so wont to say, "the bigger they are, the nicer they are."

Take the case of Maj. Woody S. Van Dyke, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer director, recently a visitor in the National Capital. This chap, who made "Trader Horn," "The Thin Man," "After the Thin Man," "Eskimo," "San Francisco," "Naughty Marietta," "Rose Marie," and a long list of other box-office smashes, need not have felt the necessity of wiring me from New York. Still, he had no more than set foot in the town when I received this: "Hail and farewell. Many thanks for your good offices. Through your efforts I had a whale of a time in Washington and I appreciate very much all that you have done for me. (Signed) VAN DYKE."

That is a lovely gesture, but ever since having received the wire I have been trying to think of something I did for this able fellow besides attend his parties!

As was reported here briefly a few days ago, the Welfare Fund Committee of the Variety Club, under the chairmanship of Rudolph Berger, Washington branch exchange manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, really has gone to work.

Last Friday night, a show was put on for the inmates of St. Vincent's Home that you couldn't have bought for money—Archie Engel, Henry Haviland and Jack O'Magic, three of the District's foremost prestidigitators; a long program of short-reel screen subjects, enough ice cream and cake to go around at least four times, and all the rest of a great evening for the kids.

This column regrets that its official duties ran so far into the night that it was unable to be among those who received the cheers of the youngsters after the affair was over.

On Friday night of this week, Mr. Berger will take his show to the Episcopal Home for Children and entertain about 75 boys and girls, all under the age of 16.

This is a worthy work that finally brings to fulfillment one of the major purposes in organizing the Variety Club of America as a source of charitable enterprise.

That screening thing has started up again. I mean to say that on Tuesday of this week—that would be tomorrow on any man's calendar—the Warner Brothers are previewing "Mountain Justice" for the ladies and gentlemen (sic) of the press and on the same day at the same hour the Loew interests are putting on "Wake Up and Live," for an identical purpose. These executive gentlemen evidently have not as yet heard of that inexorable law of nature that one cannot be in two places at the same time. So maybe the best thing to do is stay home in bed!

* * * *

The National Theater, beginning tomorrow night, with the return engagement of Jane Cowl in "First Lady," that hilarious comedy of Washington official life by Katherine Dayton and George S. Kaufman, inaugurates another few weeks of living attractions before once again dedicating its facilities to the cinema.

After Miss Cowl, will come Ruth Draper in a week of her "character sketches" and after that the "Follies," minus Miss Gypsy Rose Lee, already celebrated in these dispatches. There will probably be something along in the wake of all these, too, and then another indefinite engagement of a motion picture.

This time, it will be Columbia's "Lost Horizon," said to be the best thing Frank Capra has done—which would make it pretty good.

* * * *

It is interesting to note, in view of all the discussion that has attended the screen presentation of the piece, that Sam Cummins' production of "Ecstasy," now in its second week of the return engagement at the Belasco Theater, is in its sixteenth week in Chicago, where it has done enormous business. In a long conversation with this department—which has known him for 20 years or so—a week ago, Sam disclosed that he has not as yet even scratched the national surface boxoffice potentialities of his principal celluloid property. He seems to have made about half a million out of it, at that!

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

Simple Patience.

Brilliance and shrewdness are two very much overworked words, particularly at the bridge table. There are other qualities which bear equally luscious fruit. In today's hand it was that homely virtue "patience" which was responsible for the defeat of a vulnerable game contract.

South, dealer.

North-South vulnerable.

	♠ 6 3 ♡ Q 7 6 ◇ A 9 8 6 3 2 ♣ 8 7
♠ 7 4 2 ♡ 9 8 3 2 ◇ K Q J ♣ Q 10 4	North West East South	♠ A 10 9 5 ♡ J 10 ◇ 7 ♣ K 6 5 3 2
	♠ K Q J ♡ A K 5 4 ◇ 10 5 4 ♣ A J 9

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 N T	Pass	2 ◇	2 ♠
3 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

North's response to his partner's vulnerable notrump was probably responsible in a large measure for the loss of a vulnerable game. His two diamond bid was according to the best practices of contract bridge during its swaddling days, but judging by present-day bidding theory and method was inexcusable. South's bid had advertised balanced distribution, meaning that South surely had three cards in the diamond suit as well as a strong hand. That being true, North could visualize at least four and possibly five or six diamond tricks at a notrump declaration. The only result of his mentioning the suit instead of properly raising the notrump was to permit East to get in his non-vulnerable spade overcall at a low level. East's bid was risky enough at the two level; he could not have dared to come in over two notrump.

West dutifully led his seven of spades, and East, who could immediately mark declarer for at least the K-Q-J, contented himself with an encouraging card—the ten. Declarer won and immediately attempted the establishment of the diamond suit. To maintain communication, West was allowed to hold the first diamond lead with the Jack. A second spade was also conceded—East this time playing the eight spot. West still had the diamonds stopped, and declarer had no other play for contract except to clear the suit. The third spade lead, this time won by the Ace, dashed declarer's hopes, for by this time Easter was ready to run off the remnants of his spade suit.

Recent Visitors Appear on Screen

Jean Harlow and Robert Taylor, two of the cinema's most colorful personalities, recently in Washington as honor guests at the President's birthday ball, will be seen together in "Personal Property," major screen feature of the bill to open at Loew's Capitol Theater on Friday. There they are, just to the north, in a filmed scene.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, April 25.—Right off the bat, let me say that a fellow with a memory—a too convenient memory—is leading with his chin in Hollywood. Too many stars want their mistakes forgotten. But as I sit here chuckling over memories from the not too distant years past, I feel it would be selfish not to share the fun. Anyhow, here goes:

BARBARA STANWYCK.

I remember when Dick Powell gave out an interview which began: "Happy marriages in Hollywood? There is no such thing. Oh, I know a lot of people kid themselves into thinking they're happy, but * * *" (more of the same).

I remember when Gary Cooper shyly named the qualifications of his "dream girl" to an eager press. "The only type," he said, "he would marry." The Composite gal he word-pictured was as little like Sandra Shaw Cooper as Lupe Velez.

I remember when Ann Harding, Barbara Stanwyck, Mary Pickford, and Joan Crawford (this list could go on indefinitely) were quoted for publication giving reasons why they would never, never, never divorce (respectively) Harry Bannister, Frank Fay, Douglas Fairbanks, sr., and Ditto, jr.

* * * *

I remember when Al Jolson shouted that he had made his last picture (let's see, how many pictures ago was that?) When Sam Goldwyn stated, "I am confident talking pictures will never replace the silent drama" (his actual words). When Leslie Howard quoth, "I'll never grant another interview" (then gave five more to explain why).

Boy, oh boy, the Hollywood "nevers" that never stay never!

Pat O'Brien picked up a copy of "Gone With the Wind," read the first page, then turned to and read the last page. With a disconcerted pop of his lips, he snapped to Margaret Lindsay, "Imagine anybody writing a book this long, and not finishing with a gag."

Much has been published about Edward G. Robinson's love of fine paintings, and about his collection brought into his home from far nooks. But I do not recall reading the story of the actor's first interest in oils, which may have had something to do with his present hobby.

A double-handful of years ago when Robinson was out of a job, he foolishly spent $15 of is last $50 on an old painting that caught his eye while he was rummaging through a second-hand store. Two weeks later Eddie was offered $1,000 for the piece. He did not sell, but he did borrow on it, and this money floated him over the lowest ebb of his career. Today the same painting is his prize. I doubt if any amount of money could buy it.

* * * *

An unusual happening which took place at a studio yesterday noon still gives me a chilly feeling around the gills. Gloria and Barbara Brewster, twin girls who are so identical that but for a freckle under Gloria's eye they might be a woman and her mirrored reflection, are under contract to Warners. Douglas Frawley, the Brewsters and I lunched together, and two waitresses served us. One took the orders of Gloria and Doug; the other served Barbara and me.

Although neither Gloria nor Barbara had any idea what the other ordered, their carefully selected luncheons were identical when set on the table, even down to a special kind of bread, tea and dessert.

Gayety

"SWING GIRLS." Independent Burlesque Association attraction in two acts and 25 scenes, starring Hinda Wausau, supported by Madge Carmyle, Loretta Martin, "Jaileta," Gerard and Marco, Lew Devine, Frank Penny, the Three Jolly Tars and Johnny Kane. Dance numbers produced by Paul Kane. Staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by Larry Roberts.

With a dashing swagger, a careless toss of the head and a clever anatomical oscillation, the "Garbo of Burlesque," as Col. Lake is disposed to bill her, returns to furnish another bright spot for local burlesque patronage.

Hinda Wausau is back!

Hinda offers her usual individualistic touches while practicing the revelatory pursuit, and retains that ability to "sell" which has preserved her position just one notch below La Corio in the favor of the customers.

Among the feminine charmers, aside from the Wausau lass, are Madge Carmyle and Loretta Martin, handling the auxiliary disrobing chores and handling them in superb fashion. Blonde Miss Carmyle adds a tap-dancing specialty which possesses enough merit to rate her a place in the show on the basis of that effort alone.

A Night Club Artiste.

There are three zanies on the bill this week who refer to themselves as the Three Jolly Tars, and their turn, while impressing as a nerve-wracking way to make a living, is very amusing. The boys punch, kick and maul each other in divers ways, finish on a hilarious musical hokum bit, with bass horn and toy piano. It is something a bit different; the first-show house enjoyed the nonsense.

Gerard and Marco offer their reliable vocal duet, in addition to furnishing capable support in the scenes, while Johnny Kane is an able and hard-working "straight." Comedy is supplied by Lou Devine and Frank Penny. The material is routine, and the boys fail to give it life through new twists.

Greta Garbo Is Served In $10,500 'Loan' Suit

Los Angeles, April 25 (AP).—The elusive, secretive Greta Garbo may soon make a court appearance here. James P. McCarty, attorney, said a process server who attempted to reach her for three weeks, finally caught her automobile at a stop signal and tossed a subpena into her her lap.

The lawyer said H. Fitzpatrick, assignee for David Shratter, former head of the Trianon Film Co., of Berlin, sought to recover $10,500 which Shratter claims he lent her when she was an "unknown" in the movie world, back in 1924.

The Post's New Yorker

By LEONARD LYONS

New York, April 25.

FEATURE STORY: The usual development now comes to light, in connection with the slaying of Tania Lubova—the slaying in which Mischa Ross yesterday was indicted . . . Moya Engles, the young lady who discovered the victim's body, last night was being offered to the booking agencies as a feature theatrical attraction.

* * * *

THEATER DEPT.: The marquee at Minsky's Oriental this week reads: "Yes My Darling Oughta." . . . Yesterday Morton Minsky was warned by Mr. DeLiagre, producer of the current hit, "Yes, My Darling Daughter," to change that marquee sign. "I don't know why you should squawk," Minsky replied. "We've burlesqued Shakespeare's titles—'Julius Teaser,' 'Merchant of Venus,' etc.—and HE didn't squawk."

* * * *

MUSIC DEPT.: Emil Coleman and his band have been engaged by Howard Heinz, the pickle king, to play at a reception he's tendering in Pittsburgh. The contract reads that he's to play exactly 57 songs—one for each of Heinz's varieties.

* * * *

RADIO DEPT.: Clark Andrews, director of the "Aunt Jennie's Real Life Stories" program, hurriedly read the script of the show before the broadcast and then selected the cast. He noticed that one of the characters was called Pedro, and so for that role he selected Orson Welles—the swarthy actor who has appeared with Katharine Cornell and now starring in "Dr. Faustus" . . . Later, Andrews discovered his error—for the script called for Pedro to speak but two words, "Si, Senor." . . . And at the broadcast Welles, an actor of excellent reputation and talent, muffed even that short line. He spoke it: "Okay, Senor!"

* * * *

TRAVEL DEPT.: Edward G. Robinson arrived at Grand Central, but for some unexplained reason he didn't emerge from the train for ten minutes—while the fans and photographers waited impatiently . . . The real reason for that delay was Alexander Woollcott, who was on the same train and who had been playing backgammon with Robinson. Woollcott was losing, and—just as the train pulled in—had demanded one final game to get even.

* * * *

FASHIONS DEPT.: Until three weeks ago 19-year-old Pauline Spiak was an $18-a-week Brooklyn steno. She answered a chorus-call for the Hollywood Restaurant and was selected for the $40-a-week job. Her family, however, enter objection . . . "But I've got to," Pauline argued, "What kind of clothes can I wear on $18 a week? But with this $40 . . ." Thus she convinced her parents, who, still wondering, attended the premiere, where they saw their daughter appear—dressed in six square inches of black lace, a black mask and two dozen small colored beads.

* * * *

BEAUTY DEPT.: Joe Lewis, the clown, opened at The Frolics . . . Joe, who somewhat resembles Durante, took to the floor and heard a ringsider whisper, "Y'know, he could be considered very handsome." . . . "Yes," Lewis agreed, "if I were a stork!"

* * * *

FINANCE DEPT.: Jack Kirkland, author of "Tobacco Road," owns the Forty-eighth Street Theater, in association with Sam Grisman, the producer . . . Mr. Kirkland wanted to see "Hitch Your Wagon" at that theater last night, went to the box-office to secure his tickets, and missed almost the entire first act—because the box-office man insisted that Kirkland prove his assertion that he was the owner of the Forty-eighth Street Theater!

* * * *

DRAMA DEPT.: Observers who attend the performance of Maurice Evans in "Richard II" have noticed a faintly perceptible shudder by the members of the cast in Act I, Scene II . . . Evans, portraying King Richard, stoops to stare into the eyes of Augustin Duncan, the brilliant actor and brother of Isadora Duncan—and speaks: "Uncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes I see thy grieved heart: thy sad aspect." . . . For Duncan is blind.

BUSINESS DEPT.: Murray Kissen, of the vaudeville team of Burns and Kissen, returned from a theatrical tour bringing a prize bulldog to his home. His father inquired regarding the success of that tour and asked whether Kissen had saved any money . . . "Well," Murray explained, "you know how those things are." . . . That evening the elder Kissen played pinochle with his cronies, who asked about the tour . . . "Tell us," one kibitzer queried, "how much money did your boy save?" . . . "Eh," Mr. Kissen shrugged, "he saved up a bulldog!"

The Mordkin Ballet Co. presents "Giselle" and "The Goldfish" in the National Theater Sunday night. Principal dancers: Lucia Chase, Viola Essen, Leon Varkas, Dmitri Romanov and Mikhail Mordkin. Conductor: Eugene Fuerst. Decor and costumes by Sergei Sudeikin.

Returning to Washington after an absence of 12 years, Mikhail Mordkin brought his new ballet troupe to the National Theater last evening to present one of the choreographic classics, "Giselle," and a novelty, "The Goldfish," by Alexander Cherepnin. The veteran of the Russian school, held in remembrance as the lithe and vaulting partner of Anna Pavlova, was welcomed by an interested and enthusiastic assemblage of spectators.

It has been many a year since "Giselle" has been seen, for it has been crowded from the stage by more modern spectacles, and its significance was become almost antiquarian. Nearly a century ago, when Carlotta Grisi was the dancing idol of Paris, three popular men of the day combined their wits to produce a vehicle for her graceful talent. Heinrich Heine suggested the story, Theophile Gautier wrote the cenario, and Adolphe Adam composed the music. The vogue of the ballet was long, and various prima ballerinas used it, the last being Anna Pavlova.

Nowadays its romanticism has a somewhat faded air, for maidens no longer die of broken hearts when their swains desert them, nor do the Villis pursue the faithless lovers to make them dance themselves to death. The tale is as out of date as the theatrical and conventional music which accompanies it, yet it has the charm that clings to olden things that were dear to the hearts of our forebears.

On the other hand, "The Goldfish," derived from a fairy story by Pushkin, pertains to the pure fantasy that always has a place for musical and chareographic treatment. The poverty-stricken old fisherman, who catches a magic fish and releases it to return for the promise of unfilled wishes, and his shrewish wife, who insists upon making wishes and exhausts the patience of the donor, symbolize failings of human nature.

Thanks to the fine characterization of Mikhail Mordkin, whose personality dominated the scenes, even when he was motionless; to the imaginative music of Cherepnin, and to the colorful costumes and fanciful decors of Sergei Sudeikin's devising, "The Goldfish" was thoroughly interesting.

Of the dancers, Leon Varkas excelled all others in technique and in the ease of his artistry, while Dmitri Romanov was a capable foil. Lucia Chase, who danced the title role of Giselle and the part of the fisherman's wife, has not yet attained the rhythmic certainty and the perfect co-ordination of a premiere danseuse. Her technique is well grounded, but it has not become second nature to her, and her histrionic ability is still in the making. Viola Essen, who impersonated the goldfish, is a promising young dancer of considerable poise.

3 Hunted in Kidnaping Of Girl, 18, and Escort

Boston, April 25 (U.P.).—Police tonight sought three men who allegedly kidnaped an 18-year-old girl, her escort and a friend in front of her Roxbury home.

The alleged kidnaping occurred early this morning as marjorie Reid, Thomas Alifierri, 14, and Patrick Pascarella, 24, were seated in the latter's parked automobile. Miss Reid said that three men seized the car drove it several blocks and then at gunpoint ordered her and her two companions to get out.

SPORTS — The Washington Post — SPORTS

* X — WASHINGTON: MONDAY, APRIL 26, 1937 — 15

This Morning

POVICH.

I seem suddenly to have acquired a ball team. It has been conferred upon me, apparently. Anyway, the guys who used to sidle up to this department and, out of curiosity or something, ask, "What do you think of the Washington Club this season?" Aren't putting the question so impersonally these days.

Now they're asking, "What's the matter with your Nats? "thus implying that it's my ball team and that as far as they're concerned they ain't got nothing to do wid it—'specially since Nats have come up with three lickings in four starts.

Anyway, I'd say the main trouble with the Nats is that they haven't been winning ball games. Outside of that, they're a fine bunch of boys, sound of wind and limb and nice to their folks. And the reason they haven't been winning ball games is as plain as the nose on Durante's face.

• • • •

Get Me a Feather

They have been hitting with about as much vigor as a rigor mortis patient. The team that figured to place seven .300 hitters on the field has averaged only seven hits per game and slightly over two runs. I'd say that was the trouble with the Nats.

• • • •

Their real sin, however, is their betrayal of the club's pitching. The Nats' anemic batting has been almost treasonable. Pitching was supposed to be the lone dubious asset of the Washington Club, yet its pitchers, with perhaps one exception, have turned in what would have been winning efforts behind any reasonable batting support.

But baseball is a funny game. The Athletics, who didn't win a game from Washington until August of last season, have already won three from the Nats. And perhaps the reason they've only won three is that they have only played the Nats three times. But the fact remains that at this writing the A's have won as many games from Washington as they were able to win last year when the clubs met 22 times.

• • • •

And the vagaries of baseball have never been more strikingly illustrated than in the four games the Nats have played thus far. They went into Yankee Stadium and knocked off the World Champions with the great Lefty Gomez in the box, but they couldn't beat a Philadelphia team that is unanimously regarded as the worst club in the league—in three tries. It doesn't add up, but there are the figures.

• • • •

Just Wait, Boys.

At that, while there may be nothing at which to point with pride as far as the Nats are concerned, except possibly the club's pitching, there appears little to view with alarm. The season is approximately 2½ per cent over and the Nats, who are three games behind the league lead, have 150 more games to play. Much can happen before September 30 (Aw, right, I heard that; about yeah, Washington might even win a game).

• • • •

It just doesn't jell that Washington will be such a pushover. Guys like Joe Kuhel, Buddy Lewis, Al Simmons, Johnny Stone and Cecil Travis figure to catch up with the pitchers ere long. Ben Chapman and Buddy Myer alone have been carrying the batting burden thus far. And it has been a right-handed pitcher who has beaten the Nats in every case. With that left-handed batting order of theirs, right-handers don't figure to beat the Nats, but they did.

• • • •

And the only left-handers to face Washington—Ed Emith and Lefty Grove—were knocked out of the box, if you remember, but the club that was supposed to be a setup for left-handed pitching. Baseball, it is a funny game, all right.

• • • •

Anyway, if my fair weather pals are going to refer to the Nats as my team, now that they are a losing outfit, I'm going to talk like a club owner. What I mean is: Don't give up on US yet. The season is young yet. This team has plenty of fight and we will make it tough for a lot of 'em. There, now.

• • • •

In Short—

There can be no quarrel, at least, with Shanty Hogan's throwing arm. . . . six have tried to steal second on the fat man this season—five of 'em to their sorrow . . . the A's are the only club in the league with a right-haned hitter batting in second place . . . other managers put left-handed hitters second in the batting order on the theory that they are rightfield hitters, and any kind of a single into rightfield will enable a base runner to advance from first to third . . . Bob Feller's 1937 debut with Cleveland was hardly a disgrace despite those four runs he allowed in the first inning . . . he was able to strike out 11 Browns in six innings of duty . . . when Jack Rothrock drove in the winning runs with a pinch hit for the A's on Saturday, it was not the first time this season that the Nats had met up with him . . . Rothrock beat the Nats out of a game at Tampa when he was with the Reds last month. . . . Buddy Lewis only recently discovered that the bats he ordered from a Louisville factory were 4 ounces heavier than his original model and were slowing his swing.

Bees' Rally Nips Giants, 3-1, in 9th

Cliff Melton, Giants' Rookie Pitcher, Fans Thirteen.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 25.—With the help of Elbie Fletcher's two-run double, with two out in the ninth, the Boston Bees whipped the Giants, 3 to 1, today to win their first game of the season and end their string of 38 consecutive scoreless innings.

Fletcher's two-bagger, which fell just out of Mel Ott's reach and followed Gene Moore's single, a Giant error and a walk to Al Lopez, ruined an otherwise fine pitching performance by Rookie Cliz Melton, Giant importation from the International League.

Melton fanned 13 Boston batters for the best strikeout record of the new season, but just failed to keep up his airtight pitching through the ninth.

The veteran Guy Bush went the route for the Bees and let the Giants down with six hits for the National League champions' first defeat of the campaign after three straight victories.

Indians' Late Rally Beats Browns, 5 to 4

Tie Score in Ninth With Two Runs, Win in 11th With Single Tally.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, April 25.—Two players traded to Cleveland by the St. Louis Browns took part in two rallies today, one of them tying the score in the ninth inning and the other producing the winning run in the eleventh, enabling the Indians to defeat St. Louis, 5-4.

With two out in the ninth inning, Lyn Lary, one of the former Browns, singled. Roy Hughes doubled and Averill singled to score Lary and Hughes with the tying runs.

In the eleventh, with one out, Lary and Hughes singled. Averill grounded out and Hal Trotsky was intentionally passed, filling the bases.

"Moose" Solter, another Indian obtained from St. Louis, scored Lary with the deciding run with a drive to deep left centerfield which got past the St. Louis outfielders and would ordinarily have been good for at least two bases.

Vines and Perry Return This Week

Ellsworth Vines, who unleashes his power-packed drives Wednesday night on the University of Maryland indoor court against the shrewd Briton, Fred Perry (top). The champions are returning here after hundreds were unable to see them on their first visit in January, when they packed Ritchie Coliseum to the rafters.

Stars Arrive Tomorrow for Match Wednesday Night.

By John R. Vosburgh

The tennis profession's foremost practitioners, Frederick John Perry and H. Ellsworth Vines, make their second entry into Washington tomorrow for a reappearance at the University of Maryland, Wednesday night.

Largely because 700 would-be spectators were turned away at their first visit here in January, they are making their second trek to the Capital.

The match is not, as we carried in Tennis Shots yesterday, Thursday night, but Wednesday. A publicity man's handout was responsible for this gross error. Regardless of the night, however, Mr. Vines and Mr. Perry are worth looking at, if merely because two of the ranking figures of sports history.

Both began unblessed by riches, and by sheer tennis artistry not only fought their way to the top of the tennis world but into wealth, prestige and prosperity. As the first world champion England has produced since the Dohertys of 30 years ago, Perry is a significant figure.

The man who brought England the Davis Cup, who has won every national championship worth winning, and who has become the only man besides Bill Tilden to win the American title three times, will go down in Father Time's record books as no ordinary athlete. Some of the why and wherefore of his success will be evident Wednesday when he strolls out on the Ritchie Coliseum court.

Despite the Britisher's fame, Vines has set him back 25 times in their 47 matches around the country. They play in Buffalo today. Promoters of the matches report that the British Embassy will entertain Perry, the son of an humble cotton worker, when he arrives here Tuesday.

A bit overshadowed by the greater prominence of Messrs. Vines and Perry, George Martin Lott, world's premier doubles player, and Bruce Barnes, leathery Texan, are on the same bill. The 3,800 fans who paid some $5,500 to see the troupe here a couple of months ago got a good share of their money's worth from the sparkling match between Lott and Barnes.

The doubles tactics of this pair, who opposed Vines and Perry, brought forth a steady stream of gasps comparable to the feature match.

Incidentally, the number of people seeing the tennis troupers on this trip is nearing the half-million mark, every previous record long ago having fallen by the wayside.

The race, scheduled for 40 laps, was stopped at 37 when the car driven by Frank Beeder, St. Louis entrant, skidded on a turn and went through the fence. Beeder, who was riding in second place, was not seriously hurt.

Record Throng at Boston as Pat Malone Bests Ferrell.

Bump Hadley, Wild, Is Replaced in Fifth Inning.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, April 25.—Pat Malone's relief pitching tamed the Boston Red Sox today as the New York Yankees batted out a 9-to-3 victory before 35,000 spectators — largest single game crowd in Fenway Park history.

Wes Ferrell, big right-hander, started for the Red Sox but had poor control and was replaced by Rookie McKain in the seventh after being hit safely by the first three men.

Bump Hadley, Yankee starter, ran into trouble in the fifth inning when he forced in two runs with bases on balls. Malone took up the burden and fanned Gaffke for the third out with the bases loaded. The former Chicago hurler allowed one run the rest of the way—Bobby Doerr's homer with two out in the ninth.

The Yankees fielded flawlessly and all but Malone and Hoag hit safely. Roy Johnson, former Red Sox outfielder, slammed out three singles to lead his mates in slugging.

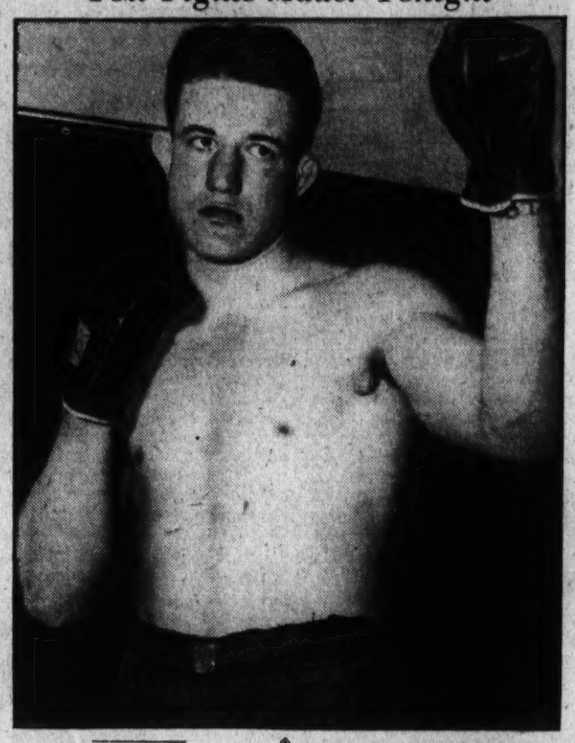
Tow Fights Mader Tonight



Alexandria Heavyweight Rules Slight Favorite in 'Comeback' Bout.

By Bill McCormick.

Robert Tow, the scowling heavyweight from Alexandria, will make his first start in many months against Eddie Mader, a veritable whirling dervish, at Turner's Arena tonight.

Because of his superior size and punch, Tow rules a slight prefight favorite in the wagering despite his lack of recent bouts. In gymnasium workouts Robert, who always shows to advantage in training, has looked as good as ever as he flattened one sparmate and cracked three ribs on another.

If Tow can return to the form which earned him a string of sensational victories in last year's heavyweight elimination tournament in Chicago, he may be in line for some real money once the outdoor season gets under way.

One plan now under consideration calls for the winner of tonight's bout to meet Sandy McDonald, the Texas heavyweight who held Marty Gallagher to a draw recently, with the winner of that bout to meet Marty. From all those proposed fights it is hoped a strong local favorite will be developed to clash with some outstanding heavyweight in the summer.

Mader will be outweighed some 20 pounds by Tow, who generally is expected to record about 200 pounds on the scales. Giving away that tonnage will be no new experience for Eddie, who seldom scaled more than a few pounds over the lightweight limit even when he was battling his way to the fifth ranking position among the heavyweights.

Both Mader and Tow have defeated the horrible Tony Galento, the knockout king, but Eddie did it twice, whereas Robert scored only one victory over the roly-poly New Jerseyite and dropped the verdict in a return engagement.

In his last local appearance, Mader defeated Charles (Hobo) Williams, the local middleweight who previously had held him to a draw. Tow's last fight here was against Marty Gallagher, who beat him. Shortly thereafter, Robert journeyed to Texas to be knocked out by Tom Beaupre, then followed the hip injury which put him on the sidelines for lo these many months.

Ossie Stewart and Joe Pancho Pimentel, a couple of colored middleweights, will have it out in a semifinal scheduled for six rounds. In another six-round contest which has aroused great local interest, Maynard (Mutt) Womer, former Southern Conference champion from the University of Virginia, will take on Sam Bacala, of Baltimore. Bacala is a sturdy opponent who will furnish a real line on Womer's ability.

Two fours will round out the program.

Post Predictions.

Bouts are rated from A (the best) to G (not so good).

MAIN EVENT—Eddie Mader, New York, vs. Bob Tow, Alexandria, heavyweights; 10 rounds. Rated B. Tow has weight, height and reach on the New York whirlwind. He also has punch of Mader and Eddie has fallen into a bad habit of getting hit too often. For that reason, Bob should win, possibly by a knockout.

SEMIFINAL—Oasie Stewart, Pittsburgh, vs. Joe Pimentel, Puerto Rico, middleweights; 6 rounds. Rated B. Stewart is in a winning streak. It should not be broken here.

PRELIMINARIES—Maynard (Mutt) Womer, Charlottesville, Va., vs. Sam Bacala, Baltimore, welterweights; 6 rounds. Rated B. Womer was good enough to win the Southern Conference championship, which stamps him as a good ghter. He has been doing very well as a professional and should dispose of Bacala.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 25.—Driving Elden Auker from the mound with a six-run spree in the first two innings, the Chicago White Sox hung on for an 11-to-7 victory over the Detroit Tigers to gain an even split in the abbreviated two-game series.

Vern Kennedy, 21-game winner last year, minimized the effect of nine passes with as many strikeouts to turn in his first 1937 triumph. He yielded 10 hits, four bunched in the last inning when the Tigers came up with a futile four-run rally.

Numerically, "Zeke" Bonura led the Chicagoans' 14-hit attack against Auker. Schoolboy Rowe and Pat McLaughlin with three singles. Lou Berger touched Rowe for a seventh-inning homer with none on.

Myer's Shift To No. 2 Bat Spot Stands

Ostermueller, Nat Nemesis, Likely Cronin Box Choice.

Bucky Disappointed in Team's Work at Plate.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

En Route to Boston, April 25.—Nettled at their futility against the Philadelphia Athletics, the Nats tonight were transferring to Boston their attempts to win a ball game.

Manager Bucky Harris, grimly attacking a steak of the shape and general dimensions of home plate, announced that Jimmy DeShong, his leading pitcher of last season, is his hurling selection tomorrow in the first of the two-game series with the richly endowed Red Sox.

As is their custom, the Red Sox will start a left-hander against the Nats, indications pointing to the presence of either Fred Ostermueller or Rube Walberg on the mound for Boston.

Batting Shift Stands.

Harris, irked no end by the failure of the Nats to display a batting attack worthy of their pitching this season, declared himself definitely committed to the change in the Washington batting order which he first introduced on Saturday when he moved Buddy Myer up to second place and demoted Buddy Lewis to seventh.

"It's no reflection on Lewis," said Harris. "He hasn't been hitting any worse than Joe Kuhel or three or four others who figure to slam the ball hard for us, but we just can't overlook Myer.

"He's no seventh place hitter on any team. We need his power and his keen eye up there in second place where it will do us the most good. That's about the only change I'm planning. If those other fellows don't hit, we're just sunk, that's all. I'd be worried about our hitting if I didn't know they'd hit."

Cronin in Top Form.

In the Red Sox, the Nats will be meeting a club which has apparently been spurred by the return to form of Joe Cronin. The Red Sox manager, in the best playing condition in recent seasons, has beaten out all opposition for the regular shortstop berth and represents a new power in the Red Sox batting order.

Cronin has been hitting the ball with the vigor that marked him one of the league's leading hitters from 1932-1934, and in both games the Red Sox have played thus far his bat has been productive.

The Red Sox are bolstered, too, by the presence of Bobby Doerr at second base. Hailed as the prize performer in the Coast League last season, the clever Doerr has plugged an infield gap for the Red Sox and needs no apologies for his hitting.

The Nats scored some kind of a victory over the Athletics yesterday when rain in Washington held the two clubs to a draw. With three games already rained out this season, Harris and his eight-man pitching staff are beginning to view with alarm the piling up of future double-headers.

Nedomatsky Fights Abrams on May 5

Ivan Nedomatsky, Southern Conference welterweight champion from the University of Maryland, will make his last amateur appearance at Seat Pleasant May 5, Ivan's opponent will be George Abrams, District welterweight title holder, who also will turn professional after the forthcoming encounter.

Nedomatsky will sign up to be managed by Pete Reilly, the New York fight figure, today. An effort was made to interest Reilly in Abrams, but he passed up the District champion, who now will be piloted by Chris Dundee, another outstanding manager.

The Nedomatsky-Abrams contest, with seven other amateur bouts, is being promoted by the Seat Pleasant Amateur Athletic Association. This association is sponsored by the Seat Pleasant Fire Department and will not promote fights exclusively, but will also arrange other forms of athletic competition.

The bouts will be held at Duffy Stadium, which has been improved for the purpose and enlarged to accommodate several thousand spectators.

Nats Are Prime Disappointment of Week as Macks, Pirates Set Pace

Early Flop Of Griffmen Rivals Reds

Pittsburgh's Pitching Keeps Club Atop Senior Loop.

Philadelphia Teams Are Chief Surprises in Both Leagues.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 25.—Aside from old Jupe Pluvius, who led both leagues for the week, the opening fireworks along the big time baseball front were largely featured by the performances of the pitching troupes of the New York Giants and Pittsburgh Pirates.

While Philadelphia's Phillies and Athletics, both rated as sure shots for the league cellars this season, were furnishing the surprises with unlooked-for winning performances, the Giant and Pirate hurlers made those two outfits look tougher than ever in the National League picture.

The Pirates went to the wars four times and came home on top on each occasion on the strength of top-flight flinging by Cy Blanton, Dutch Brandt, Waite Hoyt and rookie Russ Bauers.

Allow Only 24 Hits.

Meeting such highly regarded opposition as the Cubs and Reds, these four gave up only 24 hits in more than 33 innings of duty. Their performances left the Pirates as the only undefeated team in either league at the end of the first week of play.

The Giants, meantime, served notice that they were ready to defend the National League flag by tossing King Carl Hubbell, Hal Schumacher, Clyde Castleman and Cliff Melton in their four starts to wind up with three victories and one defeat. The only loss was charged to rookie Melton, but he allowed only six hits and struck out 13 in his debut, while Hubbell, Schumacher and Castleman limited opposition batsmen to 14 hits in 27 innings and fanned 15.

Sharing the interest with these outfits were the St. Louis Cardinals, showing more fight than ever in spite of a weak pitching staff, and the World Champion New York Yankees, who found their heavy-hitting range only today after being rained out three days during the week.

Dean Keeps Cards Up.

The Cards, with Dizzy Dean winning two ball games against tough opposition, wound up with three wins in four starts. The Yanks, although minus Joe DiMaggio and Holdout Pitcher Charley Ruffing, came home with two victories in three games on the strength of their clouting attack and despite weak pitching.

Chief asset of the Gas House Gang in their drive to second place in the league was the heaviest hitting attack in either circuit. They clubbed enemy hurling for 58 hits, considerably higher than any other outfit, and led both loops in run-making with 37 tallies for their five games.

The Philadelphia entries in the pennant derby both wound up with better than .500 averages for the week. The Phillies, paced by a star left-hand pitching rookie in Wayne Lamaster from Louisville, who won two games, came in with three wins in five starts. Connie Mack's "apathetic" Athletics of last year received unusually fine pitching from a set of youngsters and, with Indian Bob Johnson setting the pace in the home-run circus with three circuit clouts, took the Washington Nationals three times, while losing only one game.

Giants' Defense Supreme.

Defensively, the Giants and their tight pitching and infield play, topped everything in sight, allowing only six runs in four games. They were aided and abetted in this largely through the punchless Boston Bees, who went 38 innings without a run, finally beat the Giants today, and wound up the week with one victory and four setbacks.

Afield the Yanks and Tigers, in the American League, and the Young Phillies, in the National, showed the best records with two errors apiece.

Disappointments were numerous all down the line, but Cincinnati's Reds, winless in four starts, easily came through with the dubious distinction of leading the way. Rated as a "dark horse" in the National League because of their alleged "rough-house" tactics, the Reds didn't show much of anything, as they went down twice each before the Cards and Pirates. In the American League, the Senators, showing only one win and three losses, found little on which to base their hopes as the potential upsetting influence in the loop this year.

Rookie pitching sensation Bob Feller, of Cleveland, went into action in one game, and although fanning 11 St. Louis Browns, lost a 4-to-3 decision on wildness.

Records for the week, showing games won and lost, runs, hits, errors, opponents' runs and home runs for each club:

Black Bass Protection Is Sought

By Talbott Denmead,
U. S. Bureau of Fisheries.

If you were to choose a national game fish, one that is truly American, you would certainly pick the black bass. For there is not a state in the Union, scarcely a province in Canada where bass cannot be found. Nor is there a fisherman of our fresh water streams and lakes who isn't tremendously thrilled to get one of these wily, game fish on his line.

And there is probably not a sportsman who wouldn't agree that black bass should be wisely conserved, no matter what the cost. It was in response to such sentiment that a Federal law—the Hawes black bass law—was passed by Congress in 1936, and placed under the administration of the United States Bureau of Fisheries in 1930.

There was very good reason for such a Federal law. Black bass were certainly in a state of depletion, and generally without benefit of adequate legal protection. The first job of the Bureau of Fisheries, therefore, was to codify and publish all State black bass laws, and call the attention of the various states to their deficiencies in this respect. It became, in short, a clearing house for all matters pertaining to the protection and increase of black bass.

In enforcing the provisions of the Hawes law, co-operation between the States and the Bureau of Fisheries is essential, for a violation of this Federal law always means likewise a violation of some existing State law. It is a pleasure to report that the states have everywhere been most co-operative and helpful.

But this is only the beginning. There is no good pretending that anglers cannot deplete a fish population as much as commercial fishermen; and it is consequently necessary to regulate the fishing of sportsmen if there is to be effective conservation. It is one of the fundamental principles of conservation that fish must be allowed to spawn at least once before being captured in order to provide for future stock. The Bureau of Fisheries has, therefore, encouraged the States to establish adequate size limits to protect the immature fish. Although much progress has been made in this direction such laws are very hard to enforce, and depend largely on the whole-hearted support, backing and co-operation of sportsmen.

Likewise the bureau has urged the States to close the spawning seasons to fishing, in order to give the mature fish a chance to breed. The results have been most gratifying. There are now only seven States that do not provide a Statewide closed season on black bass. There is still much to be done about this, however, for many of these closed seasons are too short, beginning or ending too early.

Some idea of how far we have gone in black bass conservation laws can be judged from these facts. When the black bass division of the Bureau of Fisheries started there were 24 States that prohibited the sale of black bass caught within the State. Today there are 44. There were 27 States that completely prohibited the sale of bass no matter where they were caught; today there are 38. And it begins to look as if the force of public opinion will soon bring the other States into line, so that there will be true national conservation of black bass.

While cleaning up pollution is not one of the duties of the black bass and anglers division, it is a most important requisite for increasing black bass. There are in this country acres and miles of water which as a result of poisoning by city sewage and industrial wastes, is totally unfit for fish life. In connection with its black bass work, therefore, the division has called the attention of State authorities to such conditions; and it has assembled and placed on file the pollution laws of the several States, as well as appropriate booklets and leaflets. Meanwhile, the division of scientific inquiry of the Bureau of Fisheries is carrying on a scientific study of the effects of pollution on fish life, and methods for its elimination, and is soon to issue two pamphlets on the subject.

Out of the black bass work of the bureau has grown the anglers division, providing a service to the fisherman or would-be fisherman, supply information on how, when and where to fish for all species of game fish, thus making his trip more profitable and enjoyable.

IVAN NEDOMATSKY.

Ivan Nedomatsky, former Southern Conference welterweight champion from the University of Maryland, will be formally signed into the professional fight game by Pete Reilly today.

Reilly, know as the Silver Fox of fistiana, generally is considered the smartest manager in the business today. He has been in Washington for several days investigating Nedomatsky's physical condition and possibilities. From all sides he has received favorable reports and will allow Ivan to affix his signature naming him as manager today.

Nedomatsky, a Baltimore boy whose brother is Jimmy Jones, of professional ring renown, started his collegiate career as a lightweight. In that division he easily captured the championship of the Southern Conference.

For the past two years Ivan has campaigned in collegiate circles as a welterweight. He twice won titles in that division, thus becoming the first fighter since Bobby Goldstein, of Washington, to win three conference championships.

Thousands of ambitious young fighters every year seek to have Reilly manage them and the Silver Fox culls the best of these.

Homers Win For Dodgers In Eleventh

Phillies Bow, 10-6, Hassett, Manush Clout Four Baggers; Grimes Out.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, April 25.—Brooklyn defeated the Phillies today, 10 to 6, in 11 innings to win the three-game series, two victories to one. Buddy Hassett's home run on the first ball pitched by Syl Johnson gave the Dodgers enough runs to win, but before the inning was over they pounded Walters for three more.

The Phillies held a 6-1 lead as late as the seventh. Brooklyn scored one run in the seventh and three more in the eighth when Manush hit a home run with two on base. Chuck Klein's two-base muff of Brack's fly with Hassett on second and two out allowed the visitors to tie the score. Eisenstat, young southpaw, the fourth Brooklyn hurler, was the winner and Johnson the loser.

Grimes was banished in the sixth by Umpire Parker for disputing a decision.

Dizzy Dean Hurls 2d Shutout, Beats Cubs

Fans Ten, Walks But One, Fielders Have But Two Assists as Great One Records 18th Consecutive Scoreless Innning.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, April 25.—It was all Dizzy Dean today and the Cardinals took a 4-0 decision from the Chicago Cubs in the last game of the series. The victory gave the Redbirds the edge in the series, two games to one.

Dizzy achieved his second straight shutout of the season and at the same time hung up 10 strikeouts, a season's record for the National League.

Three of the hits off Dizzy were by Billy Herman, Cubs' second baseman. Only one Cub got as far as third base, Phil Cavarretta reaching there on an error and a single by Ripper Collins in the first inning. The only other Chicagoan to pass first base was Ken O'Dea, who doubled in the second inning.

The first inning was the only one in which the ace St. Louis hurler failed to register a strikeout. But he made up for this by fanning two Bruins in the second and two more in the fourth.

Bill Lee, Cubs' pitcher, gave up 11 hits with Pepper Martin, Joe Medwick and Brusie Ogrodowski getting two apiece.

Lee was Dizzy's strikeout victim three times, Collins and Jurges twice each and Cavarretta, O'Dea and Hack once.

The Cardinals profited by three bases on balls and five Chicago errors. They took advantage of an error by Herman and a timely hit by Ogrodowski to score one run in the fourth inning, then counted two more in the sixth and another in the seventh, with errors by O'Dea, Lee and Collins helping out.

After Dizzy downed O'Dea on strikes for the second out in the fourth inning, Stanley Hack drew the only pass Dean gave all day. Jurges then whiffed.

When they were not fanning, the Cubs were hitting the ball harmlessly in the air. The Cards had only two assists, one for Stuart Martin and the other for Dizzy himself.

Blue Devils, Terps Lead Conference

Wake Forest Also Within Striking Distance of Southern Title.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, April 25.—Duke University was in the lead today as Southern Conference baseball teams rounded the midway mark of the college season.

The Blue Devils have received but one setback in ten contests played within the circuit. Maryland, conference baseball leader in 1935, triumphed in a trio of family clashes, but has yet to engage any of the first division clubs.

The Old Liners will have a chance to lay claim to the title, however, should they turn back Duke. Richmond, North Carolina and V. M. I. in games next month.

Wake Forest's Deacons, undefeated and far out in front of the chase just a week ago, trailed Duke today with eight wins and two losses. The Deacons turned back Davidson in two tilts during the past week, but dropped games to William and Mary and Duke.

Fourteen conference contests are listed for the coming week, headed by two Duke-Wake Forest battles. The Blue Devils play at Wake Forest Wednesday and the teams will move to Durham for a return meeting Saturday.

North Carolina State, boasting 7 triumphs in 11 family struggles, will make a four-day campaign through Virginia, starting tomorrow. The Wolfpack nine is to play V. P. I., Washington and Lee, V. M. I. and William and Mary.

In the only other match on the program Vines and Perry divided a two-set doubles match with George Lott and Herbert Stead, a Providence player who substituted for Bruce Barnes, regular member of the Vines-Perry Troupe. Barnes was forced out of action with a badly cut finger.

Olympic Walk Member Wins A. A. U. Title

Al Mangan, Lowell, Mass., Leads Cecil Blakeman by Two Miles in Cold.

Cincinnati, April 25 (AP).—Al Mangan, of Lowell, Mass., member of America's 1936 Olympic walking team, led a score of heel-and-toe artists today to capture the National A. A. U. 50,000-meter walk in a cold stiff headwind.

Mangan, second in last year's marathon, was clocked in 5:03:00.4, roughly 6 minutes behind the course record of 4:57:00.6, established by Hank Cieman, of Toronto, Ontario.

Cecil Blakeman, of Toronto, who paced Mangan for the first 10 miles, was second in 5:20:27.4 and was close to 2 miles from the tape as the slim, blond favorite breezed across.

John Abbatte, of Cincinnati, pushed Blakeman hard and took third position mere seconds later.

Close to a score of nonprofessional walkers competed in a recreational contest over the same distance. No record of time was taken although Charles Wright, of Lansing, Mich., was first; Conrad Krager, of Cincinnati, second, and George Boyer, of Milwaukee, Wis., third.

Ballimore Fans Follow Golf Pros In Driving Rain

Baltimore, Md., April 25.—Trailed by 1,500 golf fanatics, Harry Cooper and Jimmy Thomson defeated Lawson Little and Horton Smith here today, 2 up, playing the entire nine-hole match in a downpour of rain.

The match, originally scheduled for 18 holes as a part of the ceremonies dedicating the new Mount Pleasant golf course clubhouse, was cut to nine due to the weather inclemency. Mayor Howard Jackson delivered the opening address. The pros schedule was filled, preventing a return.

Thomson paced the scorers, shooting a 38 over the par 36 course, including eight pars. He went 2 over on the par 4 seventh hole. Cooper had a 39, Smith 39 and Little 41. Smith had the only birdie of the day over the waterlogged course, a 3 on the eighth after a 30-foot putt.

The

Three Stake Races on Card for Maryland Racing Fans This Week

2-Year-Olds To Struggle In Aberdeen

Pimlico Nursery, Spring Handicap Scheduled; Notes of Turf.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., April 25.—With War Admiral's ability at a distance definitely established by his smashing victory in The Chesapeake Stakes here yesterday, two events remain on the Spring program at this track before the Maryland turf scene shifts to ancient Pimlico on Thursday. Wednesday will be an off day and the turfwriters will have a chance to catch up on their knitting while the favorite bettors try to figure out some of the flipsiest flipflops in racing history that occurred here last week. The past six days proved a "some thing always happens to the favorite" period and many of the heaviest played horses didn't even get a peak at the money and not a few finished as dead as doornails and definitely last.

Three stake races are scheduled to be contested this week. After tomorrow's ordinary program with a $1,000 feature for fillies, aptly named the Modesty, The Graw will be on a closing show that will bring up for settlement the Aberdeen Stakes, a $2,500 added test for 2-year-olds at four and half furlongs. On Saturday, Pimlico offers a pair of prize events in the $5,000 added Baltimore Spring Handicap, for 3-year-olds and upwards at 6-furlongs and the Pimlico Nursery, a dash of four and a half furlongs for juveniles.

The renewal of the Aberdeen will be the twenty-fifth. It was won in its first year (1913) by Enver Bey. Since that race, a number of popular Maryland campaigners visited the winner's circle including Tippity Witchet, Paul Jones, Careful, Single Foot, Rock Man, Vander Pool, Bonanza and Wise Duke. Goldey F. won it last year.

The make up of the Aberdeen is a guess at best at this time. However, five Maryland-bred youngsters are reasonably certain of facing the barrier. They are: Mrs. R. H. Heighe's Rehearsal, C. F. Hockley's Botro, Ral Parr's Jolly Dutchess and A. G. Vanderbilt's Indian Lodge and Jack Be Nimble.

The sping handicap at Pimlico likely will draw its field from J. B. Belk's Wise Sister, Bomar Stable's Billy Bee, Howard Bruce's Jay Jay, B. F. Christmas' Sunned, Mrs. Emil Denemark's Sir Quest, Hal Price Headley's Whopper, R. H. Heighe's Purple Knight, John A. Manfusco's Aneroid, Felix Spatola's Wise Prince and A. G. Vanderbilt's Speed to Spare.

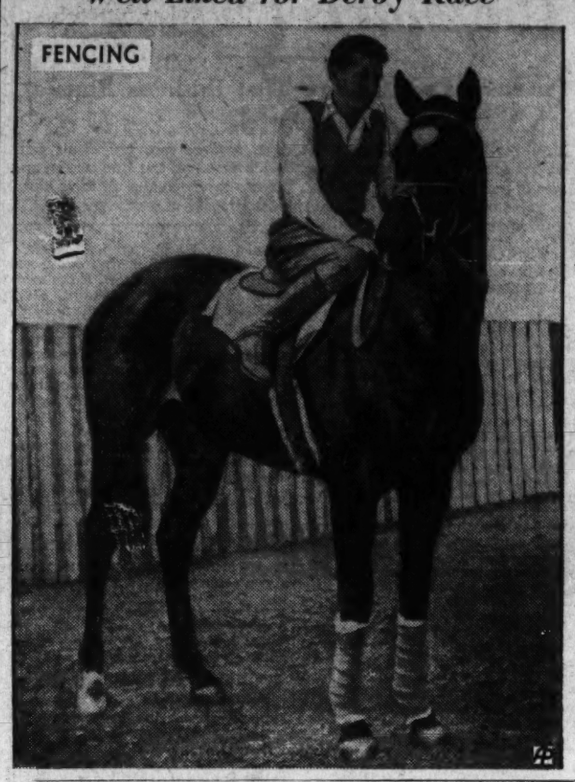
Turf Notes—A prominent horse owner bet $500 even with a jockey agent that War Admiral will finish nearer the top in the Derby than Pompoon . . . the bet was made before War Admiral's victory yesterday . . . the record for the Aberdeen Stakes is :53 . . . four horses, Single Foot, Rock Man, Vander Pool and Bonanza, are joint holders of the mark . . . B. Frank Christmas, of Upper Marlboro, Md., purchased Masked Gal from ynie Neustetter yesterday, which accounts for the scratching of the filly from the first race . . . Jockey Earl Steffen came all the way from Kentucky to ride Court Scandal in the Chesapeake . . . War Admiral and Court Scandal will be shipped to Louisville tomorrow in the same car . . . War Admiral deserves the front end of the car . . . the Denemark horses have been having a tough time since the suspension of Trainer Bert Michell . . . the camera used on the finishes here has not been turning out pictures satisfactory to the judges . . . vibration caused by the yelling of the crowd is believed to be the cause . . . however, decisions have been uniformally good . . . although there hasn't been the number of close finishes here that materialized at Bowie . . . Ralph Eccard, the apprentice, is leading the jockeys in the race for the $500 watch . . . the track says watch, but the winner gets the cash . . . sounds better . . . of course, the winner can buy a watch if he so desires . . . horsemen are warning that Col. Bradley must be respected in the Derby . . . and they say Brooklyn is the horse . . . despite that defeat at Keeneland . . . it is probably good for the game that Matey didn't start in the Chesapeake . . . after his miserable showing Wednesday, it would have been the height of something or another had he won te $10,000 race . . . I look for those Burch-trained horses to do some real bearing down at Pimlico.

Spring Sailboat Races Postponed

Lowering skies and a drizzling Sou'wester forced postponement of the first sailboat race of the spring series, which was to have been held by the Potomac River Sailing Association off Hains Point yesterday.

Paul Tomalin, chairman of the race committee, said the racing calendar would not be interrupted, as a double-header is planned in the near future to round out the schedule. Next Sunday's race will be sailed at the usual time as there are still some handicaps for the slide rule to iron out.

Well Liked for Derby Race



At The Post . . . .

With Bill Bennings

Dear Al: Selections at Havre de Grace.

Last week I picked the winner of the Kentucky Derby. Now I'm about to give you the winner of the Preakness. The first horse home will be one of these: Airflame, Andalusian, Avenal, Baron Gray, Betty's Buddy, Bewitched, Billionaire, Biologist, Black Look, Broadkill, Brooklyn, Burning Star, Charing Cross, Chicolorado Clingendaal, Clodion, Court Scandal, Danarco, Dawn Play, Dellor, Dr. Heiman, Eli Yale, Fairy Hill, Fencing, Flying Cross, Flying Scout, Fore, Francesco, Gerald, Gold Band, Gurkha, Heelfly, Jackie D., Jewell Dorsett, Knight's Plume, Leap, Le Knight, Maedic, Main Man, Mars Shield, Masked General, Matey, Melodist, Merry Maker, Military, Moonton, Mosawtre, Nevernever, Night Bud, No Dice, No Sir, Old Nassau, Over the Top, Par, Petrose, Pompoon, Prairie Dog, Prince Arthur, Prince Sador, Ptolemy, Quincy, Reaping Reward, Rex Flag, Riparian, Royal Feast, Rudie, Rye Beach, Sceneshifter, Scintillator, Scrooge, Sharpshooter, Siam, Sir Damion, Tedious, The Runner, Traulove, Triple Action, Uneasy, Unfailing, Up and Doing, Upper Berth, Victorian Star, War Admiral, White Tie. Anyway, this was one way of passing along the Derby and Preakness entries to those Benningites who have requested them. Just think, if I didn't write all of those names, I probably would have spoken out of turn about some jockey and took a beating.

BILL.

First race—Peppery turned in a good race last out with high weight. Takes off 12 pounds for this test and with Kurtsinger to do the riding, I see no reason for mistakes. Prairie Prince, with 99 pounds, is much better than that last and might upset the top one. Wandrel is as good as that excellent last.

Second race—Do It may do it in this field. Showed nice speed last week in his first outing. Breaks off the rail and will have to be caught. Clocker Mike says Low Cuts is outworking the best of them. Jolly Jack for the show end.

Third race—Dashing Doe has raced brilliantly here and gets in with 101 pounds. I prefer this one to the formidable Brandywine entry of Turky Run and Broadkill. Sun Power has been hiding and could surprise.

Fourth race—Care For was poorly ridden last out. I understand that Kurtsinger may be engaged to ride. Regal Lily has class but may need a race. Graceful Flight was left at the post last out.

Fifth race—The Heighe Stable has been racing honestly and will be represented in this by Zay and Brown Twig. Both are at tops. Her Reigh and Rowes Crump to battle it out for the minor award.

Sixth race—I'm going to try to put over a long one in Sir Reg. He is stepping up a bit here but ran his last along the outside fence. If turned loose, Sir Reg will do a lot of surprising. Molasses Bob was a beaten favorite last out. Torquil works fast and races slowly.

Seventh race—Departed gets my call even with the presence of Zembla in the field. Tragedian for the show. Naval Cadet should be shot if he gets in the money.

Best Bet—Heighe entry (Brown Twig and Zay).

Hebrew Group Also to Have Vaudeville Program at Banquet.

The freshly washed faces of young Jewish lads of Washington will be turned toward an array of big-league baseball stars among the guests of the Washington Hebrew Congregation Brotherhood at the annual father-and-son banquet Thursday night at the Mayflower Hotel.

Baseball again is the reigning motif of the father-and-son gathering, which has been staged for 13 years in the largest available ball rooms of local hotels. Outstanding members of the New York Yankees, including Lou Gehrig, Joe DiMaggio, Jake Powell and Lefty Gomez, have been invited to attend, and Washington players will be there in force.

Owner Clark Griffith of the Nats will make his annual contribution of baseball passes to the lads who accompany theri dads to the affair.

Sidney B. Lust, perennial chairman of the banquet committee, has arranged a fun-filled program ranging from Mickey Mouse and Popeye caricatures to acts of magic, a Punch and Judy show and headline vaudeville acts from Washington theaters.

Radio stars of the Capital will also be on the program, which will start at 6:45 p. m.

An award will be made to the boy who submits the winning manuscript in an essay contest which has as its subject: "What the Father-and-Son Banquet Means to Me."

Feller Will Pitch In Regular Turn

Cleveland, April 25 (AP).—Bob Feller's pitching arm was "all right" today, Manager Steve O'Neill of the Cleveland Indians said.

The "million-dollar" arm—object of tender ministrations from trainers and physicians after the 18-year-old strikeout artist disclosed to O'Neill he had pulled a muscle—will not delay Feller's return to the game, O'Neill said.

"He'll be ready to take his regular turn," the Indians' pilot predicted.

One Grade . . . There are no second or third grades of Blue Sunoco Motor Fuel. It is outstanding in every gasoline quality—fast in acceleration, high in knockless power, smooth in performance, economical in mileage.
One Policy . . . To make a uniformly high quality motor fuel that gives top performance and still sell it to motorists at the same price as ordinary gasoline. That is the Sun Oil Company's one all-important policy.
One Price . . . Since we make only one motor fuel, economies are effected in refineries, warehouses, delivery trucks and gas pumps. That is why we are able to make Blue Sunoco quality so high and still sell it at regular gas price.

On the Air Today

Horace Heidt, the gentleman who leads the big three-ring circus of orchestras, originates his Columbia network show tonight from Washington. In case you have stopped reading the papers entirely, Maestro Heidt and his extensive company of Brigadiers are playing at the Earle this week. The two programs originating in the Washington Hotel's Hall of Nations room probably will draw far more requests for passes than will be available, for the Heidt organization really puts on a grand "eye show." And sometimes that can't be said for groups primarily in the business of entertaining for the ear alone.

However, as usual, the ducats are a bit difficult to obtain. The sponsor of the program has charge of the distribution, which has one decided advantage—it leaves radio desks and the radio station and others connected with the show entirely in the clear when the people call asking for tickets.

One program will be broadcast at 7. The second, for West Coast audiences, is scheduled for 11 o'clock, I believe.

In case you sit home and listen, as usual, you'll hear "Hot Lips," played by the Trumpeteers; Larry Cotton singing "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes;" Jerry Bowne's "Today I Am a Man;" Bob McCoy singing "Old Faithful," and Horace himself, with the assistance of the entire company in "The History of Swing."

Heretofore the Brigadiers have returned to Columbia's New York studios for their broadcasts when they've been on tour. However, they've chartered a bus for this swing around the hinterland and tonight's show, from Washington, breaks a precedent.

Other features today:

Allen Prescott—The "Wife Saver" moves to a new period at WJSV, at 12:30.

A Capella Choir—Of High Point, N. C., in classic hymns and spirituals, WJSV, at 3:15.

Enter Cryil—Ray Noble's valet reads the maestro's lines tonight in the Burns and Allen show, due "to the strain on Noble serving as band leader and comedian," WRC, at 7. Cyril will be played by Bill Hardy, Noble's drummer and business manager.

"Let's Visit"—Mutual's visiting microphone goes to Harlem, with Dave Driscoll and Jerry Danzig, WOL, at 7:30. Calls are made at apartment doors.

"Fibber and Molly"—Leave for Hollywood after tonight's program, WRC, at 8. They're to do a movie and future shows will originate in Los Angeles.

Fourteen-year-old Concert Pianist—William Kapell guests in "Bamberger Symphony," WOL, at 8:30. He features last movement of Concerto in C minor, Opus 37, by Beethoven.

Robert Taylor—Stars in play that brought him movie stardom, in "Radio Theater," WJSV, at 8. It is "Magnificent Obsession," supported by Irene Dunne. Dr. Lloyd C. Douglas, play author, will be heard in intermission.

"Will of Stratford"—An original dramatization of life of Shakespeare, by Bosley Crowther, WMAL, at 8:30.

"Hour of Charm"—With Phil Spitalny and the all-girl orchestra, now heard Mondays at 8:30, WRC.

Here and there: David Manley is appearing nightly at the Rialto, with Pearl Hauer, organist, singing "Little Old Lady" and "When Day Is Done." He's back by popular request . . . Miss Hauer's organ periods, "Myriad Voices," shift to WRC, effective this week . . . Owing to the sudden illness of J. A. Smythe, who plays "Mr. Barbour" in "One Man's Family," the role is being written out of the perennially favorite serial for four weeks . . . Nora Stirling begins a new children's program, WJSV, at 5:45 tonight called "Funny Things." Miss Stirling is also Mary of "Mary and Bob." J. H. H.

Steel Prices To Hold Steady In 3d Quarter

Cleveland, Ohio, April 25.—Announcement of third quarter prices at second quarter level for most steel products has done much to stabilize the market. Action by leading makers is being followed generally. Determination of prices so far before the usual date was in response to pressure by steel consumers who found it difficult to quote on their products without knowledge of their costs, says Steel.

Removal of price uncertainty by this action is expected to steady the market and remove the incentive to speculative buying. Mills expect less pressure than in the past for place on their books. Some of this effect is already observed.

Heavy accumulations of orders are being reduced somewhat as specifications in some products are less than shipments. On other items deliveries are still remote. On the whole the delivery situation is improving gradually.

Pig Iron Demand.

Pig iron producers have not decided on policy for third quarter, but mounting costs of labor, coke and other items may bring an advance. It is believed no decision is likely for a fortnight or more.

Insistent demand for pig iron, heightened not a little by export inquiry and tonnage already booked for foreign shipment, is causing further productive capacity to be blown in. In addition to the stack already lighted at Central Furnaces, Cleveland, and an additional stack at the Corrigan, McKinney plant of Republic Steel Corporation, Cleveland, Colonial Iron Co., will blow in a stack at Riddlesburg, Pa., early in May. Other stacks in the East are being prepared for activity. Inquiries for at least 60,000 tons of pig iron for export are pending in the Pittsburgh district.

Although some producing centers have made slight increases in operations the national rate remains steady at 91½ per cent of capacity for the fourth consecutive week. Cleveland gained three points to 79½ per cent, Buffalo three points to 93, New England three points to 100 and Chicago half a point to 84½ per cent. No change was made at Pittsburgh, at 95 per cent, Eastern Pennsylvania at 59½, Youngstown at 86, Wheeling at 96, Birmingham at 80, Cincinnati at 86 and St. Louis at 82. Detroit lost five points to 95 per cent.

Argentine Exports 2.7 Times Imports

Bueons Aires, April 25 (AP).—Argentina's near record grain exports for the first quarter of the year gave the country a favorable trade balance for the three months almost equaling that of the entire year of 1936, official figures of the ministry of finance disclosed today.

Exports for the quarter amounted to the equivalent of about $252,000,000, compared with imports of $92,000,000, leaving a favorable balance of $160,000,000. Exports for the period were more than double those of the first quarter of 1936. Imports increased by 5 per cent.

Chile Copper Co. Doubles Dividend

New York, April 25 (AP).—Income of Anaconda Copper Mining Co. from subsidiaries was boosted about $2,200,000 by declaration today of a 50 cent dividend on Chile Copper Co. capital stock.

Anaconda owns more than 98 per cent of Chile's approximately 4,415,500 outstanding shares, on which dividends had previously been paid at the rate of 25 cents quarterly. The dividend is payable may 27 to stock of record May 4.

Gold Imports Triple Previous Week's Total

The Commerce Department reported yesteday that gold imports during the week ended April 16 were almost triple those of the previous week. The imports were $65,397,979 and $22,773,220 for the respective weeks.

Silver imports were $386,367 and $649,607, respectively, while silver exports aggregated $90,804 and $181,764.

584th Dividend.

Boston, April 25.—A dividend of 20 per cent, payable on all policies expiring during the period June 1 to June 30, 1937, has been declared by the American Mutual Liability Insurance Co. This is American Mutual's 584th consecutive dividend of 20 per cent or more.

The Market

Quarter's Profits Show That Business Runs at High Level.

New York, April 25.—Omens last week favored recovery in all markets, but after gradual improvement in the first half the tide turned and prices in most departments declined. Stocks lost virtually all their hard-won gains of the past ten days and the trading level was a low one.

Government bonds were the first to feel the lack of support, and their weakness toward the close of the week compelled fresh official interference. Natural recovery in sentiment toward the Government section relieved the Federal Reserve Banks of purchasing activity in the first few days and this week's statement of the system showed no change in the Government bond investment account.

Markets were inclined to keep in the background the worries over changes in the gold price, but certain other considerations would not down. Now that Congress and the administration must face the problem of higher taxation and a reduction in expenditures, or be prepared to run the risk of a panic in the Government bond market, business enterprise finds a fresh strain. Commodity markets had succeeded in recovering their balance fairly well, after being knocked down three weeks ago on the warnings of the President; but they are now between fires of a possible change in both the volume and the direction of Federal spending, of official restriction on production and prices, and of a rapidly changing situation abroad.

Commodities Recede.

On the whole the setback in commodities seems to have given the markets a stronger feeling. Some of the speculative froth has been wiped out, but it is not yet clear whether, as often happens, the downturn in commodity prices will be followed by a recession in business activity. Normally lower prices of raw products ought to help many industries, but actually a good deal of the rise in volume of trade in numerous trades has been based on expectation of further rise in prices and a possible shortage of goods. With that fear lessened the tendency may be for consumers to take less interest.

Steel Prices.

The steel industry probably will follow the lead given last week by the United States Steel Corporation and leave prices unchanged for third quarter. Doubtless that action will be approved at Washington, but from a business standpoint it will have a stabilizing influence as, tending to hold back a rush to place orders that could not be filled in any event with the steel mills already near capacity. Steel scrap prices have settled a little, but pig iron demand continues large. Abroad an actual shortage exists, in Germany, for example. Copper this week sank further the price being cut to 14½ cents a pound, after recently reaching 17 cents, but the industry expects stabilization at this level.

Farm products also have softened a little, which makes it all the less likely that the authorities will do anything to raise the value of the dollar in terms of sterling. Crop prospects this year are good, especially for grains, and the moves toward peace in Europe now being taken probably have relieved some speculative pressure toward higher prices. Meanwhile credit expansion gave way to contraction this week. Bank excess reserves dropped sharply in spite of another large addition to the monetary gold stock.

Trade Rise Continues.

Statistics of the week helped to support stocks in the face of the general unwillingness to abandon the sidelines. The steel trade moved up another notch in its operating rate. Railroad freight car loadings increased sharply over a year ago and were higher than for the previous week, almost reaching a new top for the year. Unemployment figures, as revised by the Government, confirmed estimates heretofore printed in the Sun suggesting that industry is now using a record number of employed, and that in a single month more than 300,000 have been added to pay rolls.

That evidence of a high rate of prosperity is amply supported by the first quarter corporation earnings now being published. The Sun's compliation of 151 companies shows a gain of 55.9 per cent over a year ago. Breaking the figures down to industrial companies, the rise over last year was 66.7 per cent, which in view of the excellent recovery of 1935 and 1936 points to business conditions meriting every effort at maintenance and clearly showing little need for any further stimulant.

Business Rise Exceeds Pace Of Last Year

Major Industries All Report Advances for This Year.

New York, April 25.—Industrial activity advanced during March and for the first quarter of 1937 the volume of industrial output, on a seasonally adjusted basis, was somewhat above that for the final quarter of 1936, according to the regular monthly survey of business conditions issued by the National Industrial Conference Board.

Current output of electric power, petroleum, steel ingots, machine tools, shoes, leather, and cotton textiles, the Board's survey points out, is higher than in the corresponding period of 1929.

In March, more than seasonal expansion took place in production in the iron and steel, copper, zinc, machine fool, bituminous coal, petroleum, electric power and cotton textile industries. Activity in the automobile industry, with production still curtailed by strikes, and in the building industry failed to show the customary improvement for the month.

In the field of retail trade, chain store sales increased sharply in March, with Easter business reported at record levels, but department store sales advanced by less than the usual seasonal amount from February to March. The value of mail order sales for the first quarter of the year was 26% higher than in the corresponding months of 1936. Retail prices in March advanced to the highest level since March, 1931.

Steel ingot production in the first three months of 1937 was higher than for any previous first quarter on record. The recovery in the steel industry has resulted for the most part from increased demand from the automotive and miscellaneous industries, rather than from improvement in orders from the construction and railroad industries. During the first three months of 1937, orders for construction steel were slightly less than a year ago, due to a decline in public contracts. Steel purchases for railroad equipment increased over last year, but were still well below the average rate in the pre-depression years.

Automobile production in the United States and Canada during the first quarter of this year increased about 15.3% over the corresponding period of last year. Had not labor difficulties reduced output for the idustry as a whole, production would have been about the same as during the first quarter of 1929. The curtailment in production caused by strikes has resulted in the building up of a sizeable backlog of new car orders.

Lumber Shipments Increase in Week

The lumber industry during the week ended April 17 stood at 71 per cent of the 1929 weekly average of production and 79 per cent of 1929 shipments.

New orders though slightly below the average of March weeks were heavier than in any of the first ten weeks of the year. Production was nearly as large as in the previous week, which was the record week of 1937 to date. Shipments were heavier than in any preceding week of the year.

National production reported for the week ended April 17 by 4 per cent fewer mills was 2 per cent below the output of the preceding week; shipments were 6 per cent above shipments of that week; new orders were 9 per cent below that week's orders, according to reports to the National Lumber Manufacturers Association from regional associations covering the operations of important softwood and hardwood mills.

Shipments of Lead Outrun Production

New York, April 25 (AP).—Stocks of lead in the United States declined further in March as shipments continued to outrun expansion in production, figures compiled by the American Bureau of Metallurgical Statistics showed today.

Stocks at the end of March were reported at 137,028 tons, compared with 156,832 at the end of February and 223,388 at the close of March last year. Production rose to 43,642 tons from 37,451 in February and 35,150 in March, 1936, and shipments expanded to 63,425 from 50,375 in February and 36,743 in March, 1936.

Baldwin Reports Loss for 12 Months

Philadelphia, April 25 (AP).—Net loss of $1,197,700 for the year ended March 31 was reported today by Baldwin Locomotive Works and subsidiary companies, including the Midvale Co. The loss was established after all charges, provision for Federal taxes and deduction of minority interest for the Midvale Co.

The loss compares with a net loss of $2,334,375 for the 12 months ended March 31, 1936 and with a net loss of $2,163,949 for the year ended December 31, 1936.

Cotton Consumption Ahead of Last Year

New York, April 25.—American cotton was forwarded to mills of the world in larger volume this week than in the corresponding week last year, according to the weekly report of the New York Cotton Exchange. Forwardings totaled 262,000 bales this week against 197,000 last year.

Total forwardings during the season to date are 10,819,000 bales against 9,594,000 in the correspoding period of last season.

Municipal Financing.

New York, April 25.—New State and municipal financing scheduled for this week by 1 State and 54 municipalities totals $23,958,203, compared with the revised total of only $15,328,357 for the past week, according to the Daily Bond Buyer.

Police Thwart Two Attempts To Enter Store

Three Suspects Detained After Calls to 7th Street Place.

Burglars tried twice yesterday to enter the Sloan Clothing Co., 735 Seventh street northwest, and each time they were interrupted by the police. Three colored men were under arrest as suspects last night.

The first burglar alarm was sounded at 5 a. m. and responding police seized two colored men attempting, they said, to enter the shop through a front window.

A second attempt to enter the shop was made about 3 in the afternoon. A policeman grabbed a colored man as he was entering a rear window.

In the first burglary attempt Privates H. F. Mowry and L. M. Johnson, of the First Precinct, arrested a pair giving their names as Ranse Beckhen, 32, first block Fenton street northwest, and John Simpson, 32, of the 400 block New York avenue.

Officers said they caught the men cutting a pane of glass. Both suspects were questioned about other burglaries in the vicinity. The men are held on open charges. Policeman A. B. Nicholson, also of the First Precinct, said he found James Grant, 600 Burke court southwest, half way through a rear window.

Two half-inch iron bars protecting the rear indows had been sawed through, Nicholson said. Grant was held for investigation.

Arriving at a meeting of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Air Society of America, just as Rabbi Z. H. Masliansky concluded his remarks in Yiddish with a reference to three dictators—"three mad men who are ruining the world" the mayor shouted:

G-Men Aid Hunt For 2 Escaped Lorton Felons

Department of Justice agents yesterday joined the search for the two members of the "blackface bandit" gang, who escaped from Lorton Reformatory Thursday afternoon.

The G-men want the bandits, Walter Forbush and Martin J. Walsh, for the theft of an auto, mobile used in two holdups Friday night and also on a charge of escaping from a Federal penal institution.

Local police, meanwhile, believe the two desperadoes have left the city following the holdups staged by them Friday night in which more than $500 was taken from two liquor stores.

Photographs of the escaped felons were identified Saturday by Edward B. Smith, proprietor of a liquor store at 609 Eleventh street southeast, and by Alex Sterling, owner of a shop at 429 Fifteenth street northeast, police said.

Police believe the men, after staging the Eleventh street robbery, continued south on the southern Maryland highway. Crossing a State line in a stolen automobile makes them prey of Federal agents for violating the Dyer act.

Forbush and Walsh smashed their way out of the Virginia reformatory Thursday afternoon in a guard's automobile on which they had been working. They managed to flee through the guard line without a shot being fired at them. Both were serving terms for robbery.
